PACIFIC LACKS NAVAL BASES IN CRITICAL HOUR

No Facilities There for United Fleet.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Washington, D. C., April 16.—[Special.—Whether the navy, divided by Secretary Daniels into an Atlantic and a Pacific fleet in defiance of the first canon of strategy, is to be reunited is a question which will be decided eventually by President Harding.

Secretary of the Navy Denby declines to admit that the matter is even under consideration, but there is good reason to believe that it is being studied not only by the navy, but by the state department. Presumably Secretary Denby's view from a naval standpoint will be formed in the light of the advice of the navy general board.

Involved in the question are considerations of an international character of such moment that the final decision will rest of necessity with the president.

Lack Bases in Pacific.

Supporters of the Mahan doctrine, that the navy should be maintained at all times as a single fighting unit, instantly ready for war, assert no time should be lost in repairing the blunder of Daniels and Wilson by bringing the two fleets into permanent union.

On account of the aggressive attitude of Japan, it is held that the two fleets ought to be joined and maintained in the Pacific. Unfortunately, the naval bases in the Pacific are not adequate by half for the accommodation of the entire navy for more than a few weeks at a time. The United States has been neglectful in this respect, and congress is only now beginning to consider the expansion of Pacific naval bases on a scale commensurate with the demands of the entire navy.

Reunite on Atlantic Coast.

It being a physical impossibility to reunite the navy in the Pacific, the only alternative is to join the two fleets in the Atlantic, where adequate bases exist. Some officers hold that the withdrawal of the Pacific fleet to the Atlantic would be construed in Japan as a weakening of American purpose in the Pacific, with the result of encouraging the Nipponese to assume a bolder attitude in pending controversies between the two nations.

Other officers contend that we need not worry about misconstruction of our purposes if we actually do the one thing necessary to preparation of the navy for effective and instant action—the reconsolidation of the two fleets in the Caribbean sea, close to the Panama canal.

Dutch Harbor Strategic Point.

In considering the American defenses in the Pacific attention has been directed by some naval officers to the proposition of creating a strong naval base at Dutch Harbor, Alaska, which in its strategic possibilities is called the Gibraltar of the Pacific. According to this view, based upon Dutch Harbor, a fleet could hold the sea forces of the nations on the western coast of the Pacific in port, or it could command the eastern coast of the ocean as far south as the Panama canal.

In the event of war until the American fleet was dislodged from the Dutch Harbor base, a fleet would not dare to venture from Yokohama or any of the Asiatic ports. With a superior force at Dutch Harbor, even the Philippines would be guarded from an attack by a Yokohama fleet. With a properly fortified advance base on Dutch Harbor, an American fleet could effectually blockade the entire Chinese and Japanese coast.

Helpless with Fleet Bottled.

If by any means another power should obtain control of Dutch Harbor with a superior force, the American fleet would be bottled up in its home ports. If the enemy could not be dislodged from the Alaskan Gibraltar, the entire American coast and even the Panama canal would be effectually blockaded. The American fleet would then be little more than floating coast defenses. Its commander would not dare to assume the offensive unless he was assured that the enemy would wait his advance upon Dutch Harbor.

In war, either offensive or defensive, the great advance naval bases for the American fleet are Honolulu and Dutch Harbor. These places are just 2,000 miles from San Francisco. They are also 2,000 miles from each other. With fleets in these advance bases we would have a barrier 2,000 miles out in the Pacific protecting our western coast in such a way that no enemy would pass through it without risking battle at sea at a distance of from 2,000 to 3,000 miles from its home port.

Owing to the short distance between Dutch Harbor and Yokohama the

PEGGY DENIES JOYCE CHARGES; BLAMES FAMILY

Declares His Folks Prompted Suit.

Peggy Hopkins Joyce yesterday launched a vigorous counter-attack upon her Chicago husband, James Stanley Joyce, millionaire lumberman.

She charged that the suit for annulment, which he filed last Monday, was the result of the Joyce family's "desire to get rid of her" rather than of the millionaire's own wishes.

At the same time Peggy issued a statement through the law firm of McCormick, Kirkland, Patterson & Fleming, categorically denying all the charges contained in her husband's petition.

Called Her Divorce a Fraud.

Joyce in his bill asserted that the former model, dancer, singer, movie star, and actress practiced fraud in obtaining her divorce from Hopkins to marry him. He also named six corespondents prominent in this country and Europe. He asked that the courts restore to him money and property worth $1,000,000 which, he contended, she obtained from him by trickery.

Among the men nnamed by Joyce were Barton French of Torquay, England; Edouard Letellier, former owner of the Paris Journal; Maurice Mauvet, the dancer; Evans Spaulding of New York, and E. James of London.

"The charges made against Mrs. Joyce are groundless and maliciously made," the statement issued by the Chicago law firm asserts.

He Never Complained, She Says.

"After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Joyce lived in Europe for some time, and it was only for the express purpose of attending a directors' meeting that Mr. Joyce returned to Chicago. He asked Mrs. Joyce to await his return in Paris.

"Never at any time did Mr. Joyce make the slightest complaint to his wife concerning her conduct, or intimate that it was anything except what it should be. Numerous letters written by him while in America indicate that he had no such belief."

Replying to Joyce's assertion that his wife entered into collusion with Hopkins to obtain a divorce in order that she might marry Joyce the sooner, the law firm's statement continues:

"This statement is ridiculous to any one in Chicago, New York, or Hot Springs, who knows how Mr. Joyce courted Peggy."

Lawyers to Discuss Settlement.

A conference of the Chicago attorneys for Mrs. Joyce with her New York solicitors will be held in the east next week.

"At that time," it is said, "decision will be made as to the amount of temporary alimony and fees which will be asked pending the divorce hearing. Contrary to popular supposition, Mr. Joyce has not contributed anything to his wife's support since last November."

Attorney William Klein of New York, counsel for Mrs. Joyce, was in Chicago yesterday.

"OLE SWIMMIN' HOLE" INDORSED BY PRESIDENT

Washington, D. C., April 16.—[United Press.]—President Harding today officially indorsed the "ole swimmin' hole."

John D. Walterman, 12, took up his lead pencil and wrote the President a note about the campaign of Washington boys to raise funds for a swimming pool, and invited the President to contribute a fund for that purpose.

"I have used swimming pools myself in my time," the President replied, "and there are one or two swimming pools in the creek out near Caledonia, O., that I would like to get into right now.

"You will tell the boys that if some of you will come around to the White House with some tickets I will buy some, whether I can attend or not."

72 PEASANTS TO DIE BY RUSSIAN SOVIET'S DECREE

STOCKHOLM, April 16.—A revolutionary court in Smolensk has pronounced sentence on 320 peasants accused of participating in an uprising. Seventy-two of the peasants were sentenced to death and 200 others to long terms of imprisonment at hard labor.

Reports from Petrograd say the workmen's congress still is sitting there and that there have been many grave accusations made against the Communist dictatorship. G. S. Zinovieff, the soviet governor of Petrograd, is doing his utmost to quiet the congress, and the reports assert he has even promised the laborers control over the soviet secret police.

The mensheviki, or minority, have abandoned direct attempts to overturn the soviet, but they are obliging Nikolai Lenin, the soviet premier, to make concessions after concession, advices from Moscow say.

SMALL, MISSING THEATER MAN, FOUND—PERHAPS

Kingston, Ont., April 16.—[Special.]—A man arrested here tonight who says he is George Cox, a Scotchman, bears such a close resemblance to Ambrose Small, the missing Toronto theater millionaire, that the Toronto detective bureau has been notified, and there is much local excitement over belief that the sixteen months' mystery is to be cleared up.

The man making the "identification" is Gordon Edwards, who had an office a few doors from Small in Toronto and knew him intimately, but to the correspondent Edwards would only say tonight "he may be the missing man."

However, the man's resemblance to photographs of Small is pronounced, and he bears on his arm a tatto mark similar to that which it is reported the millionaire possessed.

Detroit Municipal Trams Lose $10,923 First Month

Detroit, Mich., April 16.—The net loss during February, the first month of operation of Detroit's municipal street railway lines, was $10,923, representing an operating deficit of $2,923, according to a statement issued today. The statement said the commission was pleased with the showing made, as it had not expected to make money at the beginning.

Jackie Coogan, "The Kid," Threatened by Pneumonia

New York, April 16.—[Special.]—Jackie Coogan, "The Kid," was reported to be on the verge of pneumonia tonight at the Hotel Biltmore. Jackie exposed himself to a draft Friday afternoon while "conducting" a dance orchestra in the hotel.

"NO SALES TAX," MONDELL SAYS

Reduce Burden, Don't Shift It, He Pleads.

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., April 16.—[Special.]—Congress will refuse to enact sales tax legislation, Representative Mondell of Wyoming, Republican leader of the house, declared today. Mr. Mondell also reiterated his previous declaration that there should be a "lifting" instead of a "shifting" of tax burdens.

He indicated his belief that objectionable taxes could be repealed without providing any substitutes, notwithstanding President Harding's declaration in his address to congress that relief from tax burdens could come for the present only through a readjustment of taxes and that the revenue from internal taxation must be kept up to a level of at least $4,000,000,000.

Gives Two Reasons.

"There is not going to be any sales tax," said Mr. Mondell, "for two reasons. First, a sales tax under the American form of government cannot be justified save as a war or emergency measure, and, second, for the reason that the country needs a lifting of the tax burden."

Representative Mondell declared that the floating debt must be considered a part of the war debt and financed as such. He said it should be carried along until refunding operations are necessary in connection with the Victory loan and then absorbed in a long term bond issue.

Time to Repeal Taxes.

"The time has come," said Mr. Mondell, "to repeal some of our taxes rather than to be cudgeling our brains searching for new methods of taxation."

Present prospects are that the hearings before the senate finance committee on tax legislation will not start for another week or two, or until the emergency tariff bill is out of the way.

Steeple, Man, Cramp, Rope, Legs, Teeth; Falls, Lives

Middletown, N. Y., April 16.—[Special.]—Theodore Hobush, working at the top of a 130 foot stack here this afternoon, was seized with cramps and as he ateempted to descend, the cramps made him powerless to use his arms. He used his legs to slide some distance; next attempted to use his teeth, soon became exhausted, and fell thirty feet to the ground. He was only stunned and forty minutes later was back at work.

ONLY 2 OPPOSE LAWYER WILSON OF NEW YORK

Albany, N. Y., April 16.—[Special.]—Two Republican members—James E. Towner of Putnam and Frank L. Wiswall of Albany—alone opposed a bill in the upper house this afternoon conferring on ex-President Wilson the right to practice law in this state.

The two senators consented to withhold a negative vote on the final roll call only after groups of their colleagues had pleaded with them to make it possible to have the bill enacted by unanimous vote.

Gov. Miller, Republican, sent the bill to the senate and assembly this afternoon, accompanied by a brief message.

"I wish to recommend to the consideration of the legislature the passage of an act to confer on ex-President Wilson the right to practice law in the state of New York," said the message. "The reasons for this act of courtesy need not be enumerated at length. A lawyer by regular admission and practice in an American state, an eminent educator and author, president for eight years of a leading university, president of the United States for two terms, this distinguished citizen has a just title to a privilege the conferring of which, I believe, would be an eminently graceful act and one universally approved."

CAPTAIN BID ME KILL MAJOR, SO I DID—PRIVATE

Story May Clear Up Cronkhite's Death.

Tacoma, Wash., April 16.—Roland P. Pothier, private soldier, charged with slaying Maj. Alexander Cronkhite at Camp Lewis in October, 1918, confessed to federal authorities that he was ordered by his superior officer, Capt. Robert Rosenbluth, to bring out a loaded gun and "get" Cronkhite, it was announced today by Prosecutor J. W. Selden, who disclosed five alleged confessions made by Pothier.

"I joined Maj. Cronkhite on the maneuver grounds at Camp Lewis," the alleged confession of Pothier, made in jail at Providence, R. I., on March 24 last, reads, "and when about two feet behind him I loaded my revolver with three shells. I fired one shot into the open field and as the major was turning around in my direction I fired my second shot at the major, hitting him in the right breast."

Story of Alleged Crime.

A description of the incidents leading up to the shooting is given in the confession, Mr. Gelden said. After explaining that Capt. Rosenbluth first approached him four days before the shooting, Pothier's statement says:

"On the next day, or the night thereafter, I again met Capt. Rosenbluth, and he asked me if I remembered what he said to me the other night about firing a pistol. I answered yes. He then asked me if I had any idea what it was for, and I answered no. He then said: 'I want to get Maj. Cronkhite.' I asked him what he meant, and he said: 'I want to kill him.'

"I asked him what his reasons were, and he said: 'Because we want to get him out of the way.'"

Then Definite Instructions.

The alleged confession then stated, as given out by Mr. Selden, that Rosenbluth told Pothier precisely what he was to do and promised him protection, and then continues:

"Rosenbluth said: 'Be sure that you hit him in a good place, so he won't have a chance to say anything.'

"I asked Rosenbluth what I was to do after I shot Cronkhite, and he said: 'You never mind. I will be somewhere around, and when I see him fall I will run up and grab him. Then I will yell for a doctor and get him down there, and we will go about it just as if he shot himself. If there are any questions asked, I will tell them he shot himself accidentally.' I was to say nothing, Rosenbluth told me."

Polishing Up the "Plot."

Everything happened as scheduled, Pothier stated in his alleged confession, and Maj. Cronkhite was shot in the right breast. After the shooting Pothier described the scene as follows:

"As Cronkhite fell I heard another shot from behind and Capt. Rosenbluth came rushing upon the scene. He picked up Cronkhite and dragged his body so that it lay in a position parallel with the road. Rosenbluth then drew his pistol from its holster and shot a hole through a tobacco can, and said: 'Do not forget about this being target practice and that the major shot himself accidentally. If any questions are asked about this let me do the talking and you keep still.'

"Capt. Rosenbluth then looked over Maj. Conkhite and said, 'I think he is dead.'"

Pothier and Rosenbluth have been turned over to Mr. Selden for prosecution, but he has not yet filed state charges against them.

He said the alleged confessions were in the form of sworn statements. "There is no hint of a motive as to why Rosenbluth should have desired the death of Cronkhite," he said.

BABY GIRL SLAIN BY BROTHER DIES SHIELDING HIM

Concord, Mass., April 16—[United Press.]—Peter Ruggerio, 9, confessed today, according to the police, that he killed Josephine, 5, with a carving knife.

When the tiny girl was found crumpled up in the back yard several days ago with a deep gash in her abdomen she told her mother that she "jes fell downstairs." A few hours later, just before she died in a hospital, the child whispered the same story.

Physicians declared that a fall could not produce such a wound. The police found a carving knife in the Ruggerio home. The boy, Peter, then confessed. He described how he had wiped the blood off the knife before he hid it.

Peter was taken to the psychopathic hospital at Boston for observation. The police were uncertain whether the boy killed the little girl in a rage or in a fit of insanity.

Hundreds Hurt, Towns Shattered

Memphis, Ten., April 16.—Seventy-five persons killed, several hundred injured, property damage of millions are the latest reports on a series of tornadoes which broke late yesterday in northeast Texas and swept eastward today over sections of five states into Georgia.

Arkansas, with fifty persons reported killed in Hempstead and Miller counties, suffered the heaviest loss of life. In Alabama the number of dead was estimated at ten; seven were killed in Texas and six in Mississippi. In Tennessee, the other state which felt the effect of the storm, no fatalities were reported.

The Path of Death.

The storm aparently broke in Smith county, Tex., swept sections of Good, Case, Gregg and Bowie counties, and passed into Miller and Hempstead counties, Ark., where the reported death list tonight had reached fifty.

Six of the seven persons killed in Texas were crushed to death when their homes in the village of Avinger were wrecked. Another death was reported at Atlanta, Tex.

In the vicinity of Hope, Hempstead county, the list of reported dead tonight had reached twenty.

Fifteen others were said to have lost their lives in the vicinity of Prescott, and a like number north of Texarkana. One fatality was reported in Yell county.

Five persons were reported killed at Steen, a small town near Columbus, in eastern Mississippi, and one at Sontag, sixteen miles east of Brookhaven.

Hits North Alabama.

Leaving Mississippi, the storm swept down again in northern Alabama. In the Aycock community, near Tuscumbia, seven persons were reported to have been killed and three others lost their lives in the town of Ralph, in Tuscaloosa county.

One wreck was reported, a Southern railway mail train running into a washout near Laurel, Miss., and toppling into a ditch. One passenger was killed.

CHICAGO HUB OF IRISH FIGHT FOR REPUBLIC TODAY

Clans Rally to Seek U. S. Recognition.

With Chicago as the theater of operations, international leaders in Ireland's fight for independence today will launch a drive on President Harding and congress in the interest of the Emerald isle.

Headed by Miss Mary MacSwiney and Peter MacSwiney, sister and brother of the late lord mayor of Cork, thousands of members of the American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic are expected to take part in a parade in Michigan avenue at 2 o'clock this afternoon. Of these 5,000 will be delegates to the two day convention which opens in Medinah temple tomorrow morning.

Stowaway Mayor a Delegate.

Although Eamonn De Valera, "president of the Irish republic," will be absent in person, he will be present in spirit and even in voice, the convention program indicates. He will address the assembled delegates through a phonograph.

Edward L. Doheny, the California oil magnate, and John W. Goff of New York, president and vice president respectively of the Irish organization, will alternate in presiding.

Donald O'Callaghan, the stowaway lord mayor of Cork, who was notified by the state department last week that he must leave the country within sixty days, is prominent among the delegates.

Mayor to Welcome Irish.

Mayor Thompson is scheduled to give an address of welcome at the opening session.

Today's parade is scheduled to form at 2 o'clock at Michigan and Chicago avenues. A detail of mounted police will lead. Next will come the grand marshal, Eamonn P. Butler, escorted by a troop of cowboys from the stockyards. Thirty or more elaborately decorated floats will follow.

NORRIS' SENATE RESOLUTION HITS BRITISH IN ERIN

Washington, D. C., April 16.—Senator Norris of Nebraska, a member of the Committee of One Hundred, which investigated the Irish situation, today introduced a resolution proposing indorsement by congress of Irish nationalist aspirations and a protest against alleged atrocities of the British forces in Ireland which were described as in violation of The Hague conventions. The resolution went to the foreign relations committee without discussion.

CHICAGO RAIL AND WIRE LINES ARE CRIPPLED

Small Reported on Snowbound Train.

Gripped in the teeth of a sixty-mile gale, which rushed out of the north Friday night, bringing with it rain, snow and stinging sleet, Chicago and vicinity yesterday suffered the most disagreeable and disastrous blizzard in spring history. It was accompanied by a drop in temperature which reached the freezing point late in the afternoon.

The force of the gale diminished early today, and weather officials say the worst is over. They predict a temperature of about 28 degrees this morning, which will slowly rise. Rain and snow flurries are forecasted for the forenoon, clearing up in the afternoon.

No seasonably warm weather is expected for two or three days.

The storm caused hundreds of accidents in the city. It uprooted giant trees, which crashed down into the streets carrying telephone and electric light wires, overturned wagons and automobiles, smashed show windows and blew merchandise out into the sloppy streets and piled up snow on the railroad tracks and highways, blocking trains and automobiles.

Junketeers Snowbound.

In one train on the Chicago and Northwestern railroad, snowbound five miles from Woodstock, Ill., between fifteen and twenty Illinois legislators are marooned. It is believed that Gov. Small is also on board.

Unable to make progress in their junket over Wisconsin roads the governor and several senators and representatives started back by train, and it is believed that it is the governor's train that is marooned. Unavailing efforts were made throughout the night to reach the train through the heavy snow from Woodstock. It was reported the coaches and Pullmans are without heat. The engine, in an effort to clear a path, cut off from the train, and drifting snow prevents its getting back.

The most serious damage from the storm will be felt by farmers and early gardeners. The fruit crops in many sections, already blighted by two previous frosts, are completely ruined. Other crops just coming up are reported destroyed by the freeze and the lashing wind.

Only One Chicagoan Seriously Hurt.

Of the scores of injured given aid by the police and volunteer workers, only one, a woman, was seriously injured. She was Mrs. Louis P. Hoyt, 5102 Kenwood avenue, who suffered a concussion of the brain. Blown completely across Michigan avenue by the fury of the gale, she crashed through a florist's plate glass window.

Others injured were:

Cohen, Michael, 3223 Ogden avenue, knee injured when blown from sidewalk into street.

Decker, Miss Birdie E., 2352 South Cleveland avenue; bruised and knee hurt when swept from her feet by wind.

Hogaland, Elliott D., 1144 Esmond street; cut by flying splinters from flagpole blown from roof of county building.

Howard, Miss C. A., 1519 East 16th street; bruised on temple when blown from feet by wind at Michigan avenue and Van Buren streets.

Kelly, Miss Mary E., 51 years old, 4723 Calumet avenue, seriously injured last night when struck by a westbound street car in 47th street. Taken to the Illinois Central hospital.

County Building Flagpole Falls.

An accident which might have proved fatal to many persons occurred when the half ton flagpole on top of the county building was blown from its supports and crashed down into Clark street, bringing telephone and trolley wires with it. The pole fell within three feet of a crowded street car, and many of the occupants screamed when they heard the crash and saw the broken ends of the trolley wires crackling and flashing on the wet street.

Michigan boulevard was probably the windiest street in the city, and it was there that several accidents occurred. The fury of the gale was so great that it was practically impossible to cross the boulevard and automobiles had great difficulty in keeping on their course.

Tow Lines Across Streets.

At several intersections the police found it necessary to stretch ropes across the streets to enable shoppers and loop workers on their way to and from the Illinois Central tracks to cross. The pedestrians pulling themselves through the wind "hand over hand."

Several persons narrowly escaped injury when a heavy piece of sheet metal coping was blown from the seventeenth floor of the Ashland block, breaking the windshield of a motor truck and causing the horse of Mounted Policeman Adolph Weber to attempt to run away.

In the suburban towns trees were uprooted, fences and chicken coops blown down, telephone and lighting systems impaired, and suburban and interurban traffic disrupted.

FRUIT CROPS PERILED

Prof. Henry J. Cox, chief of the weather bureau, held out little hope for the fruit crops as a result of the storm. Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, and Iowa are the hardest hit.

"This is the third of the spring storms this year," he said, "and moreover, it is the severest. I am afraid that whatever fruit was injured by the previous temperature drops will be ruined by this one. Michigan growers have the best chance of saving their fruit, as the storm was retarded by lake influences."

This is probably the last of the so-called spring storms, the weather chief said, as they usually travel in groups of three. Other weather officials pointed out that this storm will cause heavier damage to the fruit crop because the drop in temperature was accompanied by a high wind and by sleet and snow. In many sections of the country the fruit trees are covered with sleet a half inch or more in thickness.

OLSON RAPS SOME CHICAGO COURTS IN OHIO ADDRESS

Cleveland, O., April 16.—[Special.]—Warning that America must seriously begin to protect itself from the mentally and emotionally defective was given by Chief Justice Harry Olsen of the Chicago municipal court, in an address to the members of the Cleveland Bar association today.

Speaking on "Efficiency in the Administration of Criminal Justice," he declared organized courts, similar to the Chicago municipal court, to be the first fundamental.

"We should have in our large cities but one court," he said. "We don't want inferior courts, for where the jurisdiction is limited, men of limited ability become candidates and invariably we get inferior judges."

He paid his respects to the circuit and superior courts of Chicago by saying:

"Where one judge's responsibility is as much as another's, if anything unpleasant comes along, each one can pass it by, by blaming the other. Why we have had two judges who have been away for years and nobody missed them, but the paymaster found them."

Judge Olson said the condition of building throughout the United States was largely due to failure of the courts to act. "Plug-uglies have gotten into union offices and terrorized those who opposed them," he said.

Veteran French Envoy Gets Ready to Leave Rome

ROME, April 16.—M. Barrere, who has been the French ambassador at Rome for nearly twenty-six years, is about to be recalled owing to the attitude of Count Sforza, Italian foreign minister, in not favoring France in its policy of rigidly applying penalties against Germany for nonfulfillment of reparations demands, according to a Paris dispatch to the Popolo Romano.

Mrs. Snydacker Heads Kenilworth School Board

Mrs. Ruth Snydacker yesterday was elected to succeed G. W. Kelley as president of the Kenilworth school board. The other board members, who were reelected without opposition, are Mrs. Harry P. WHEN WATCHING YOUR STEP IS EASIER SAID THAN DONE

Equilibrium was something to think about in Michigan avenue. To maintain it pedestrians were compelled to bend low and buck the wind with a vim.

Beauty always has the first call on the policeman's sympathy; masculinity struggles alone. The picture carries its own comment on gaiters that do well for the ankles but kindle no warmth for the silk clad area immediately adjacent.

Perilous indeed was the portion of the umbrella toter. The policeman had his hands full helping this woman across the boulevard while the rain played a tattoo on the umbrella.

STORM JOTTINGS

Northwestern officials have no means of communicating with points farther west than West Chicago, thirty miles from Chicago. They have no idea of conditions west of there.

Between 600 and 800 poles are reported down on the Illinois Central between Chicago and Freeport and Freeport and La Salle, with wires generally prostrated.

Diamond Trunk company's plant, 651-655 Fulton street, suffered $50,000 from fire. High wind hindered the firemen in throwing water on the flames.

Waukegan's "swat the fly" campaign, scheduled to open yesterday, has been postponed. Buried under several inches of snow.

Lighthouse keeper at Waukegan sighted an unidentified steamer, apparently in distress, three miles out in lake. Northward bound.

Food for man and bird was scattered on Evanston streets as a result of the storm. A short time after Mrs. F. H. Pattee, president of the Evanston Bird club, appealed for food for the birds, a wagon of the Evanston Home bakery was overturned, scattering thousands of doughnuts in the street.

"Somewhere" near Lake Forest a dozen automobiles are lost in the snow. Unable to make progress, the motorists were rescued by policemen on snowshoes and given aid in the country homes of several Chicago millionaires.

Gen. George Bell Jr., his staff, and several Illinois city officials and legislators are marooned in a hotel in Madison, Wis. Brave attempts to buck the storm were made, but the cars were compelled to turn back.

PREDICT QUICK ACTION ON GOOD ROADS PROGRAM

Solons End Wisconsin Trip Sure of Need.

BY J. L. JENKINS.

Madison, Wis., April 16.—[Special.]—Snowbound, Gen. George Bell Jr., his staff, and 100 Illinois legislators, bankers, city officials, and business men gathered in a Madison hotel today and watched while the storm piled drifts over the Wisconsin highway system that for two days has been the center of Illinois good roads interest. In the end most of them left their cars here and began their homeward journey on delayed trains.

Senators Buck, Hamilton, and Barbour, Representatives Tice and Denvir, and a score of downstaters joined Gov. Small and his party and returned home, convinced that Illinois must institute the patrol and maintenance system on at least 17,000 miles of her state highway system at once.

Senator Barbour is preparing an amendment to a bill now before the legislature, recommending that Illinois road patrolmen be given police powers when they are appointed, and be charged with the regulation of all traffic over their trunk lines.

"This trip has convinced us that the Illinois hard road program is the most important thing on the books," declared Senator Barbour. "It will get quick action."

The party was impressed with the advice given them by A. R. Hirst, Wisconsin highway engineer.

"You can't proclaim a mud embargo on Illinois vehicles several months in each year and get away with it," said Hirst. "When any state, politicians, or business begins to play with the good roads game, they are playing with fire that will ultimately consume them politically.

"Illinois has $60,000,000 in the roads bond issue. You men are hesitating now to tell the people that the money will not build as many miles of hard road as they were first promised. Tell them now and build now. I predict that the people of Illinois will vote bond issues for thrice the present figure before they are through and know the money well spent.

"The people of Wisconsin are going to build 6,000 miles of hard surfaced roads. At the present rate of construction, it will take us thirteen years to do it. In the meantime we are scattering gravel and keeping these unpaved roads repaired."

Part of our funds are for the constant construction of concrete roads, part to keep the others open until they can be paved. Until these railroad rates are adjusted, all road building will cost too much. It costs us in Wisconsin $4,000 a mile more to build concrete roads this year because of the advanced freight rates alone.

"But we're building roads just the same. Concrete roads cost us $15 000 a mile in 1914, $40,000 last year, and $35,000 this year. We're building. Go and do likewise."

Teachers Give Luncheon in Honor of Couple to Wed

Sixty teachers of subnormal and anemic pupils gave a luncheon yesterday in the Auditorium hotel in honor of Miss Olive Parker, a special teacher in the Gary school, 3000 South Ridgeway avenue, and Dr. Frank G. Bruner, director of special schools, who are to be married next Saturday. The wedding will be the result of a romance of the schools which began when Dr. Bruner employed his future bride as a teacher in his department.

5 Women, 15 Men, Battle with New York Police

New York, April 16.—[Special.]—Five women fought beside their men in a revolver battle today between police and twenty suspected "bootleggers" on a vacant lot in Brooklyn. One man suspect was probably fatally injured and a patrolman seriously hurt.

Twenty bootleggers were fighting among themselves when the police arrived. Excepting the wounded man, all the bootleggers escaped.

BUST CARELESS COUGHER IN NOSE, ROBERTSON'S TIP

Gives Advice for Health Promotion Week.

"If a man coughs in your face bust him on the nose and tell the judge that your assailant attacked you with a deadly weapon—the pneumoccus germ, the biggest and deadliest crook in Chicago."

It was Health Commissioner Robertson endeavoring to instill "pep" into 150 health department bureau heads and inspectors who are to be among the many cogs in the mechanism on which health authorities depend to clean up Chicago during Health Promotion week, which begins tomorrow.

"Will you pay our fines?" asked one of the inspectors.

Will Pay Fines.

"Yes, I'll back you up," answered the commissioner. "The man or woman who spits in your lung by coughing or sneezing in your face is as much of a crook as the man who hurls a bullet at you.

"It's true that persons don't cough in your face with malicious intent. They do it through ignorance. To educate them you must have publicity. To get publicity you must have action. Start a riot if you are attacked by a pneumoccus germ hurled at you by your neighbor. If you get arrested, tell the judge the story of the pneumoccus germ."

Women with postage stamp handkerchief and beautifully manicured nails are often as dangerous as thugs with black jacks, the health commissioner declared.

Peril in Hand Shake.

"They cough into their hands, then shake hands with their friends, passing the death dealing pneumonia germ along to their friends with a smile and a pleasant word. They might as well hand out a stick of dynamite.

"There was great to do yesterday over the hanging of three men. Pneumococci kill nine persons in Chicago every day. A murder a day is terrible. What about nine murders a day? That doesn't seem to worry any one, but it should."

Discharges from the mouth and throat, Dr. Robertson said, are the most dangerous of all body excretions. He advocated "cough comfort stations" in the downtown district to permit coughers, spitters and sneezers to relieve themselves without endangering the general public.

Influenza dropped back almost to normal yesterday. Only three cases were reported.

Program for Week.

The program for Health Promotion week, as announced by Dr. Isaac D. Rawlings, state health director, who also addressed the meeting, is as follows:

Monday, community cleanup day. Tuesday, fly, insect, and rat extermination day. Wednesday, clean milk and better babies day. Thursday, birth registration day. Friday, school children's day. Saturday, medical examination day.

DEATH BLOW TO RED LABOR, IS VIEW IN BRITAIN

BY JOHN STEELE.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, April 16.—At the close of the meeting of the triple alliance this morning, at which the miners were not represented, Robert Williams of the transport workers issued the following statement:

"In consequence of the confusion which confronted the conference Friday morning, no reasonable hope remained for securing the spontaneous and united action of the three bodies which was so essential to give the miners' federation the assistance which they sought.

"A partial and hopelessly incomplete sympathetic stoppage of work would have weakened the power of the three organizations without contributing any material assistance to the miners."

Couldn't Rely on Men.

From an inside source it has been learned that the railway men and transport workers plainly told the miners they could not guarantee that 50 per cent of their men would strike in answer to a call and they bluntly refused to try experiments which might destroy the unions.

The miners bitterly reproached the others for not having made their position known earlier and declared that they would fight alone.

Spokesmen for the miners and the government unite with the general tone of the press in calling the action of the transport and railway unions the "death blow to extremist labor."

Attack on Lloyd George.

At the annual dinner of the Junior Imperial league, tonight Lord Derby hailed as a triumph for the constitutional system of England the action of the house of commons on the coal strike, when it asserted its powers against the one man rule of the premier.

"The house of commons vindicated itself and once more proved that the constitutional system has once more triumphed," he said. "For any one man to try to find a solution for the present industrial dispute would have been to render the greatest disservice."

Lord Derby jocularly welcomed Lloyd George as the newest recruit to the Unionist party.

HOW TO SMASH STRIKE

LONDON, April 16.—[By the Associated Press.]—One of the most important results of the narrowly averted tieup of transport was the perfection of the volunteer organizations, which last night were ready to take over the transportation of foodstuffs and the other essential services for the nation's 45,000,000 people had the railwaymen and transport workers gone on strike.

This work of organization continues with undiminished vigor for the present crisis or any similar situation which may face the country, and the indications are that these organizations will be made permanent, as a protection for the main arteries of the country's transport in cases of stoppage.

50,000 Trucks Ready.

With the trains running, the nearly 50,000 motor vehicles which were ready to assume transportation of food in the greatest experiment of road haulage ever attempted were idle today or had been returned to their normal industries, but they have been catalogued so as to be ready for any emergency.

Enlistment in the defense corps, which aims to protect the voluntary workers, is being continued and it is stated there is no idea yet of shortening the ninety day term, in view of possible eventualities in the mining districts, where the volunteers may be called into service.

Meantime a conference between miners' delegates and representatives from all coal districts was fixed for April 22. Until then work will not be resumed in any of the coal fields affected by the strike.

Premier Is Gratified.

Replying to the communication notifying him that the railroad men and transport workers had withdrawn their support from the miners, Prime Minister Lloyd George wrote:

"I am gratified to learn your unions do not purpose to resort to an insensate method of attempting to compel the handing down of judgment on the wage question by paralyzing the country's industries and bringing suffering to millions of innocent people while the government was urging a saner method of negotiations."

Characteristic of editorial comment on the situation is an editorial in the Morning Post:

"The bluff was called and it failed. These powerful trades unions must be taught that it is not their business to govern the country."

WASHINGTON NEWS —IN BRIEF—

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 16.

Chicago, beginning tomorrow, is to be the mecca of Irish republic sympathizers and enthusiasts, who plan to launch there a drive on President Harding and congress for recognition of the Irish republic. More than 5,000 delegates are expected.

President Harding today named three men to fill vacancies on the railroad labor board, Ben W. Hooper of Tennessee, for the public group; Samuel Higgins of New York for railway managers' group, and Walter L. McMenimen of Massachusetts for the labor group.

The senate, by a vote of 47 to 20, confirmed the nomination of George Harvey to be ambassador to England. One Republican, Norris of Nebraska, voted against him. Myron T. Herrick of Ohio was confirmed for ambassador to France without opposition.

Continued delay in selection of a commissioner of internal revenue concerns the anti-wets, who believe that the proposal to transfer prohibition enforcement from the treasury to department of justice has something to do with it.

The senate finance committee will begin consideration of the emergency tariff bill on Monday, Senator Penrose announced.

Republican Leader Mondell of the house declared that no sales tax legislation will be enacted by congress and that tax burdens will be "lifted" rather than "shifted."

Secretary of the Treasury Mellon announced the terms of the $40,000,000 bond issue of the federal farm loan system which will be offered for sale on Monday.

The house will attempt to rush next week repassage of the immigration restriction bill which former President Wilson rejected at the close of the Sixty-sixth congress.

DRIVE AT PLOT TO SELL PASSOVER WINE FOR REVELS

Federal prohibition officials, police and the district attorney's office yesterday joined forces to smash what dry chiefs announced was a plot to "flood Chicago with sacramental wines for nonsecular consumption."

District Attorney Charles F. Clyne said evidence had been uncovered that showed liquor dealers planned to use the feast of the Jewish Passover, which occurs next Friday, as the opening for a $150,000 a day trade in wines and champagne.

Large Stocks Sold for Revels.

Already huge stocks of the banned beverages are being disposed of, he said, presumably for religious purposes, but in reality for "mundane drinking and bacchanalian revels."

A number of liquor agencies, he stated, have already sent out several hundred thousand letters advertising their ability to "supply the religious demand." An Irishman answered one of the missives, and the firm filled his order. "We make no restrictions based on nationality," the firm explained.

Dry Officials Start Inquiry.

Prohibition officials have been asked to make a thorough check on all wine and withdrawal permits issued next week. Capt. John B. Boddie, assistant district attorney, has been assigned to conduct the investigation.

Postal authorities may be drawn into the inquiry if it develops that sufficient evidence exists to show the mails have been used to defraud.

PARIS.—The government has started its crusade against nude women on the stage and immoral shows generally.

LONDON.—With the triple alliance strike definitely off, the miners are furious and the press generally interprets the defection as the "death blow to labor," and an overwhelming victory for the middle classes and Lloyd George.

Washington, D. C., April 16.—Secretary Denby took a whack at the high cost of living for bluejackets and marines today, ordering clothing and small stores prices down on an average of 35 per cent. His action was made possible by navy purchases during recent price smashes in the commercial world.

DRYS JEALOUSLY WATCH INTERNAL REVENUE CHOICE

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., April 16.—[Special.]—Continued delay in the selection of an internal revenue commissioner is causing prohibition leaders here considerable concern, for the reason that they have learned the chief reason for delay is the proposal to transfer prohibition enforcement from the jurisdiction of the treasury to the department of justice.

Secretary of the Treasury Mellon conferred with the president today on the subject of the new revenue commissioner, and it was announced later that no selection had been made nor would be made until Monday.

If prohibition enforcement is taken away from the revenue bureau the new commissioner will be selected without particular reference to the wet and dry issue, but with a view to obtaining a man particularly qualified to administer federal tax laws.

Evanston Man in Favor.

Edward Clifford of Evanston, Ill., who has been leading in the guessing for internal revenue commissioner, was said tonight still to have a good chance for the appointment.

Prohibition leaders do not want enforcement jurisdiction transferred. They are girding for a fight against the Volstead law repeal bill introduced in the house by Representative Hill of Maryland. The Anti-Saloon league and allied organizations disclosed that many thousands of dollars in small lots have been contributed to defeat any program the wets may try to carry out in congress. The funds provided by voluntary contributors, it was asserted, will be expended to counteract the campaign now being made by brewers and distillers.

Congress Forecast: "Very Dry."

"We are ready for a vote on the Hill bill," said Wayne B. Wheeler, legislative agent of the Anti-Saloon league today. "If a showdown were had at once we would win by an overwhelming vote. If we wait ten days or ten months the majorities will be even larger. We have no fear whatever of the results. The Sixty-seventh congress is stronger for prohibition than the Sixty-sixth was."

GONZALEZ HAS LEFT TEXAS, IS LATEST REPORT

Laredo, Tex., April 16.—Gen. Pablo Gonzalez probably is in Mexico again, it was learned today at a Laredo bank where he carried a deposit.

Notwithstanding denial at Gen. His family stated here today they were unaware of his whereabouts.

INDUSTRIES IN MICHIGAN SHOW A 47% REVIVAL

Detroit, Mich., April 17.—[Special.]—According to statements compiled by more than a score of Michigan cities, the state's industries show an increase of 47 per cent in the number of workers employed. Business leaders in all parts of the state foresee steady progress toward normalcy even though that goal is not yet in sight.

Figures compiled in the larger cities of the state indicate that normal working forces aggregate 404,900. While they have been reduced to 122,940, the number of men at present employed in these cities is 235,140.

Recent suspensions have offset Saginaw's gains. The Michigan copper country, whose principal mines suspended operations entirely April 1, is now experiencing its most severe depression since the war.

Industrial leaders generally express the belief that abnormally high transportation rates are an important factor in the depression.

Pretty 17 year old Madeline Ohlwein is no longer a student at Deerfield Township high school in Highland Park. She disappeared a week ago last night. Her mother, Mrs. Adam Ohlwein, reluctantly confirmed the rumor that Madeline has become a bride.

"She went to Kansas City and was married there," Mrs. Ohlwein admitted. "But please do not print anything about it. She had our consent."

The mother declined to divulge the name of her new son-in-law, but declared vehemently her daughter had not married a chief petty officer from Great Lakes, as gossip in the suburb had it.

WHEN BRITISH SHIPS MET THE GERMAN RAIDERS

How Squadron Started Search in Stormy Sea.

This is the first installment of Lieut. Filson Young's wonderful story of the raids by the German fleet on Hartlepool and Scarborough; the story to be followed by a thrilling narrative of the battle of the Dogger Bank, the first encounter between superdreadnaughts in the history of the world.

Lieut. Young was an eyewitness of these events from the flagship of Admiral Beatty, on whose staff he was. Other installments will be published in The Tribune tomorrow and the following days.

BY LIEUT. FILSON YOUNG.

[Copyright, 1921, in the United States by The Chicago Tribune.]

In the small hours of Tuesday, Dec. 15, 1914, the battle cruisers being then in Cromarty firth, I was aroused by the sound of our torpedo nets coming in, and when at 4 a. m. I went on duty I found that we had suddenly been ordered to sea and were to sail at 5. A German force was reported to be leaving the Ems this morning, and our orders from the commander in chief were to rendezvous with the Second battle squadron and the First light cruiser squadron from Scapa and the Third cruiser squadron from Rosyth, in latitude 57.20 north, longitude 0.10 west, at 2:30 p. m. on Dec. 15.

There had been a succession of heavy gales and the destroyers at Scapa could not accompany the Second battle squadron owing to the tremendous seas running in the Pentland firth. The Boadicea and Blanche, the light cruisers attached to the squadron, were so damaged by the heavy seas encountered in the firth (Boadicea losing several men overboard) that they had to return to their base for repairs.

Destroyers Ordered Out.

To take their place all the available destroyers from Cromarty were ordered out, also two flotillas from Harwich; but this latter force, owing to complications due to its being directly under the command of the admiralty, never got far enough to the northward to take any part in the subsequent operations. Only seven destroyers were available at Cromarty—the Lynx, Ambuscade, Unity, Hardy, Shark, Acasta, and Spitfire—and the shortage of destroyers was to prove an important factor in the occurrences of the following day.

As things were very quiet in the intelligence office I went up on deck as we passed in the dark through the boom defense at Cromarty and stayed there until we had passed out beyond the Souters, when we encountered a very heavy sea which caused even the Lion (usually but little affected by heavy weather) to roll and screw in a somewhat disquieting manner.

Signaled by Admiral.

Daylight found us out of sight of land on a southeasterly course and in weather which promised to add considerably to whatever excitements might be in store for the small craft accompanying us. At noon we received the following signal from the late Vice Admiral Sir George Warrender, who was commanding the Second battle squadron and was therefore the senior officer at sea. His squadron consisted of the battleships King George V. (flag), Orion (Rear Admiral Sir Robert Arbuthnot), Ajax Centurion, Conqueror, and Monarch.

"V. A. Second Battle Squadron to V. A. Lion:

"German squadron of four battle cruisers, five light cruisers, and three flotillas leaves Jade river at daylight today, returns Wednesday night. Am proceeding to rendezvous 54. 10 N., 3.0 E., 7:30 a. m., 16th. Hope to get news from commodore (T.) and join him. If nothing heard at 7:30 shall steer 90 degrees till 10:30 and 270 degrees till 1:30, speed 14 knots, then turn north. Considering your strength, do not get more than five miles from me. Steering 90 degrees, I want you eastern, otherwise ahead, with 3d C. S. and 1st L. C. S. under your command.

"'I think raid probably Harwich or Humbie. If you get engaged draw enemy toward battle squadron. If Commodore (T) does not join up I fear enemy's destroyers only. On joining 3d C. S. to take station one mile from your port beam. 1st L. C. S. one mile on starboard beam opening to five miles tonight, closing daylight. They are then under your command to engage enemy's light cruisers and head off destroyers as you may direct. Battle stations by 7 a. m. and steam for full speed at midnight. Warn cruisers to beware of mines floating or dropping astern. Have you any suggestions? As soon as you understand take station five miles ahead. If this weather continues if possible engage enemy to windward and steer to hinder destroyers. 11.41."

This signal did not add greatly to Admiral Beatty's knowledge of the situation he was likely to encounter next morning. Fortunately—or unfortunately—he did not know then that the Harwich destroyers, although at sea, would be sixty miles to the south of us at the critical time, and that for scouting purposes we should be dependent, in what promised to be very heavy weather, on four light cruisers and seven destroyers. However, the junction with the Rosyth and Scapa forces was duly made that afternoon, and we proceeded in the formation directed, with slight modification as to the positions in which the scouting craft were spread.

Position of Fleet.

The order taken for the night was that the battle cruisers took station five miles ahead of the battle squadron, with the first light cruiser squadron disposed five miles to starboard and the third cruiser squadron five miles to port, the destroyers being astern of the battle squadron.

In spite of the disadvantages in the composition of our force we were in high spirits and full of anticipation of a fight the next morning. Great preparations were made in the way of stripping cabins of all movable gear, removing as much woodwork as possible, and generally preparing for action. Admiral Beatty paid one of his rare visits to the wardroom before dinner, and found every one full of hope and lively anticipation. Those who were not on duty turned in early that night. I had the middle watch, which was absolutely quiet as far as signals were concerned, but was full of unfamiliar sounds made by the huge ship straining as it was driven into the heavy seas. These moderated as the night wore on, and when I turned in at 4 a. m. there was prospect of smoother weather.

Destroyers Are Engaged.

I awoke at 6:30 and, on going up to the bridge, found that various signals had been received during the last hour, indicating that destroyers were engaged astern of the battle squadron. Strong Telefunken signals were reported from the wireless, and several undecipherable German signals were intercepted; and the continuance of this throughout the morning, as well as the meager and often mangled nature of some of our own signals which we took in, seemed to indicate that the Germans were using their wireless for the purpose of confusing and interrupting ours. Ambuscade, Lynx, and Hardy were all damaged by enemy fire, the two latter withdrawing to the Humber under escort of Spitfire; and the destroyers generally, in the absence of a flotilla leader, were often scattered and were unable to give much information. Action was sounded off in the Lion at 7 o'clock, and very soon after the fine sunrise and clear sky gave promise of a welcome improvement in the weather.

Isolated Engagements.

At 7:30, the destroyers being evidently in severe trouble, we altered course to the westward of north in order to get into touch with the enemy reported. At this time (7:30 a. m.) the light cruisers were spread to the northward at a distance of five miles, and the third cruiser squadron spread five miles astern.

Presently, as the daylight increased, we sighted the battle squadron ahead and received the signal: "Are you going after Roon?" This was the first we had heard of Roon (a German cruiser), and the obscurity of the situation was deepened rather than lightened by the question. The admiral replied that he had heard nothing of the Roon and asked what course the battle squadron was steering. A few minutes later, at 8 a. m., a signal was received through King George V. from Shark, timed at 7.5., or nearly an hour before: "Position 54.22 N., 3.20 E.; am keeping touch with large cruiser Roon and five destroyers steering east, 0705."

Cruisers Alter Course.

On receipt of this signal at 8 a. m. the battle cruisers and light cruisers altered course to the eastward to cut off the Roon and worked speed up to twenty-four knots, the third cruiser squadron, which was limited to twenty knots, being ordered to preserve station on the battle squadron. The difficulties of the situation were very real. We had to bring our force from a base thirty-six hours away and hit off the enemy within an hour, for, according to the information furnished, if we did not succeed in reaching him in that time we should not reach him at all.

The next excitement was at 8:30, when Shark signaled: "Am being chased to westward" (interruption) "54.34 N., 3.48 E. 0815." Apparently, therefore, the course of the enemy was now west; but as yet we had no information as to the position of his main forces. At 8:42 we intercepted a signal from the coastal scout Patrol, which did not give its position and whose signal was obscured by German interference, stating that it was heavily engaged with two enemy battle cruisers, upon which course was altered to the north.

Climax to Puzzle.

Ten minutes later the climax to this puzzle was provided by a signal intercepted from the admiralty to the commander in chief: "Scarborough being shelled."

I remember receiving this signal by the chartroom telephone (it came through the first time as "Scapa being shelled," but even that could not add very much to the confusion). However, it gave us at least two definite points of enemy activity, and course was immediately altered to the westward in order to cut off the enemy's return from Scarborough. Soon after we had intercepted the signal to the commander in chief we received a signal from Sir George Warrender: "Scarborough being shelled; I am proceeding toward Hull." Beatty's reply to this was characteristic. I forget the wording, but the effect of it was: "Are you? . . . I am going to Scarborough," and to alter course himself to the westward in the direction of Scarborough. I think it was before this, or, at any rate, very soon after, that a signal was received from Sir George Warrender, who knew his man, practically telling Admiral Beatty to use his own judgment.

It now appeared that the enemy's main forces were to the westward and not eastward of us. The weather promise of the early dawn had not been fulfilled; mists were driving over the sea, visibility was reduced to about five miles, and the spray caused by the heavy seas made gunnery conditions poor for light craft.

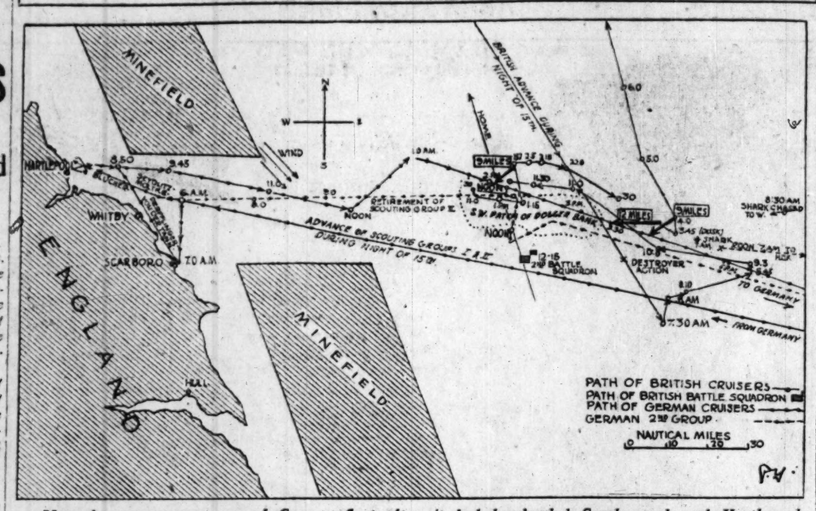
CHASING THE GERMAN FLEET



Map shows narrow escape of German fleet after it had bombarded Scarborough and Hartlepool. Stormy and misty weather was all that saved the German warships from destruction. This engagement is described in detail by Lieut. Filson Young, who viewed it from the fighting top of Admiral Beatty's flagship Lion.

How the British naval forces were assembled to meet the raid by the German squadron which bombarded Scarboro, Whitley, and Hartlepool. The cross shows the approximate position on Dogger bank in the North sea where the raiders narrowly escaped Admiral Beatty's forces.

NEW ARMY GASES WOULD DESTROY WHOLE NATIONS

Washington, D. C., April 16.—[United Press.]—The use of poisonous gas at the end of the world war "was a child's game compared to what it will be in the future," Brig. Gen. Amos A. Fries, chief of the chemical warfare division, declared tonight.

Gen. Fries described in detail the "toxic smoke candle" and a liquid gas called the "dew of death," new American discoveries. Speaking of the toxic smoke candle, he said:

"The old type cloud gas that required the burying of cylinders in deep trenches, requiring the work of many men for many days to prepare an attack, is obsolete, but the modern method is a totally different matter.

"It is a solid, safe and foolproof. It may be crushed, smashed, or punctured with bullets or shells without harm. It is only when a fuse is lighted and a heating mixture is agitated that a gas is given off.

"The candles may be very light or they may be heavy; they can be so small as to be carried in a knapsack, or so large as to require the efforts of many men. Its attacks are highly efficient, more than 50 per cent of the total weight being poisonous gas."

Referring to the liquid gas, General Fries said the effect of this is to cause burns that are severe and difficult to heal.

"If three drops of this liquid gas be absorbed into the skin, it will cause death in most cases, while smaller quantities will put a man in the hospital. This gas and the common mustard gas, which likewise burns the skin, can be sprinkled from airplanes in practically unlimited quantities."

LA FOLLETTE HAS MR. LUGUBRIOUS BLUE FADED OUT

Washington, D. C., April 16.—[Special.]—Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, addressing the people's legislative service here tonight, declared that "a mighty power, the product of monopoly and organized greed, has taken from the American people the control of their own government."

This power, he said, had proved strong enough to nominate the candidates for both political parties, dominated legislative bodies, state and national, extended its influence to cabinets, and the appointments of judges on the bench, fixed prices, imposed burdens on the public in defiance of law, controlled transportation and finance and monopolized the resources of the people's domain.

The senator denounced as undermining representative government the lobbies of industrial and commercial organizations now located in Washington.

DEATH PENALTY, MANY CAPTURES, SMASH AT CRIME

Wanderer Must Die; 3 Mail Suspects Snared.

Chicago criminals had another bad day yesterday following the "Black Friday" on which four of them met death—three by the hangman's noose and one from police bullets—while three were captured and one was wounded.

Developments of the day which tended to impress the underworld with the fact that the law enforcement forces are wide awake and that "somebody cares," were:

Carl Wanderer, after many delays, was sentenced to be hanged.

Three men accused in connection with the $390,000 Dearborn street station mail robbery were arrested, and the two were sent to Joliet for safe keeping.

The Cicero bank robbers were linked up with the Summit bank robbery.

Three supects were captured in connection with a $10,000 cigar store robbery.

Two pickpockets, who admitted half a hundred purse thefts, were seized.

Raids and arrests in various parts of the city were successfully carried out by the police and state's attorney's office.

Carl Wanderer, slayer of his wife and "the ragged stranger," was yesterday sentenced to be hanged on June 17 for the latter crime. Sentence was pronounced by Judge Joseph David. It was the first time the judge had sentenced a man to die.

The motion for a new trial entered by Attorney W. D. Bartholomew was denied as soon as the attorney finished his argument. Assistant State's Attorney Lloyd Heth, who prosecuted Wanderer for the murder of the "ragged stranger," was not given an opportunity to present his side of the case.

"My mind is made up," said Judge David. "I have no quarrel with the decision of the jury which ordered Wanderer to be hanged. The motion for a new trial is overruled."

Will Appeal to Supreme Court.

Attorney Bartholomew announced he would appeal to the Supreme court. Wanderer was then called.

"You have been found guilty of murder by a jury," said Judge David. "Have you anything to say before I pronounce sentence?"

"No, sir; I have nothing," said the defendant.

"Then I sentence you to be hanged until dead on June 17, between the hours of 6 a. m. and 6 p. m."

Wanderer broke into a broad grin when Attorney Bartholomew turned in his direction.

He again laughed when Judge David announced he would allow ninety days for the filing of a bill of exceptions.

"Ninety days," interrupted Attorney Bartholomew. "He's sentenced to be hanged in less than that."

"Well, I'll intercede for you with the governor if it really takes longer than sixty days for you to prepare your record," Judge David said.

When Alienists Disagree.

In answering Attorney Bartholomew's arguments, Judge David pointed out that eight prominent physicians testified regarding the defendant's sanity, and that they were fairly equally divided in their opinions.

"Such a condition is distressing," he declared. "The time has come that something must be done to prevent the procuring of medical testimony. It is deplorable."

TRAP MAIL SUSPECTS

With the arrest of three men—a loop lawyer, a plumber, and a peddler—postal inspectors were confident last night that they had the key to the $390,000 Dearborn street station mail robbery.

The lawyer and plumber are charged with being "fences" for part of the loot. They are Attorney Rauel Grunewald, 6 North Clark street, and Engval Stevenson, 5931 Artesian avenue. The third man is "Sammy" Simon, a peddler of 1155 Cherry street.

Late in the afternoon Grunewald and Stevenson were taken before Commissioner Mason. The attorney's bonds were fixed at $10,000 and Stevenson's at half that amount. In default of the bonds both were taken to Joliet.

Although postal authorities refuse to discuss the arrests, it is said less than $2,000 of the loot has been recovered. Suspicion is said to have been aroused when Grunewald and Stevenson attempted to dispose of bills known to have comprised part of the stolen registered mail. Simon also is said to have had part of the stolen money in his possession. He is not linked up with the other two men. The police say he is an ex-convict.

SUMMIT ROBBER SLAIN?

Information furnished to the Cicero police by Clyde Gilmore, chief engineer of the Congress hotel, led them to believe that the bandits who met disaster in attempting to hold up the Cicero State bank on Friday are members of the same band that held up the Summit State bank recently.

When the inquest over John Zromski, slain Cicero bank robber, was opened Gilmore told Capt. James Valeska that the dead man, who formerly was an assistant engineer at the Congress, had boasted of having taken part in the Summit robbery. Zromski told him, he said, that he had purchased an automobile prior to the robbery and had used it in the holdup.

Gilmore declared he had told Zromski's uncle, Julius Norwell, of the conversation and advised the latter to report it to the police. When Norwell took the witness stand he refused to say anything regarding the habits of his nephew.

A $75,000 CIGAR "MINE"

Details of a cigar business that is alleged to have enriched certain employés of the American Railway Express and cigar store owners to the tune of $75,000 during the last year were bared by State's Attorney Crowe.

Following an investigation by Ben Newmark, his chief investigator, he announced that cigars valued at $75,000 had mysteriously disappeared after arriving in Chicago in the care of the express company. Three men were arrested in connection with the thefts. They are Louis L. Burnett, 914 North Hermitage avenue, a cigar dealer; Henry Drell, 1164 West Grand avenue, a cigar dealer, and Claude Russell, 227 South Halsted street.

Burnett and Drell were seized on charges of receiving stolen property. Russell was named by Wallace Key, a druggist at 1402 West Lake street, as the man who had sold him cigars valued at more than $5,000. Cigars valued at $3,000 were found in the drug store of Gershuny & Epstein, 1742 West Chicago avenue. Officials do not believe that they had knowledge the property was stolen.

W. E. Riggs, an official of the American Railway Express, said the company had stopped recent thefts, but had been unable to uncover the system used by the robber gang.

Women Identify "Dips."

A dozen prominent women of the north shore identified Samuel Malvera, 1110 Milton avenue, and Peter Vertrano, 1016 Sedgwick street, as the two men who had robbed them of their purses. The police say during the last few months more than thirty women have been the victims of purse snatchers.

Malvera was also identified as the "short man" of the "long and short" duet that operated in the Cragin district last year. His former companion, the "long man," is now in Joliet.

Nab Slayer Suspect.

Richard Pallgren, 752 East 39th street, was arrested as a suspect in the slaying of Walter Fields, a bartender in the Dreamland cafe at 3518 South State street. Pallgren had a revolver he said he found in the cafe after the shooting Wednesday night. One chamber was empty.

The Campbell gardens at Campbell avenue and Madison street was closed by Chief Fitzmorris on recommendation of State's Attorney Crowe, who characterized the cafe as "a breeding place for crooks."

CRIMES OF THE DAY

Two young men entered the store of Gruhin & Holden at 4814 South Ashland avenue early in the morning and asked to be shown some new shoes, which, they said, the storm had forced them to buy. They were fitted out and as the store partners rose to go to the cash register the men drew revolvers, forced the two against the wall, took $67 from the till, and handcuffed their victims. The police were forced to take the two business men to a machine shop to have the handcuffs removed.

Two men held up a branch store of the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea company at 1032 East Fifty-fifth street. "Hurry up—get your hands up," one of them shouted to Harry Crewitt, manager. Crewitt backed against the wall while the men rifled the cash register of $129.

WOMAN BRAVES LIFE AS CRIPPLE FOR HER CHILD

Kenosha, Wis., April 16.—[Special.]—Mrs. Edna Beyersdorf Regenthal, a former Kenosha woman, gave birth to a child in New York last month. The fibulæ of both the child's legs were missing. Surgeons removed more than eight inches of bone from each of Mrs. Regenthal's legs and transplanted it into the child's body, in the hope the operation might give him the power to walk.

Mrs. Regenthal was told the operation might result in herself becoming a cripple, but she insisted on making the sacrifice. Reports declare both patients are recovering nicely.

Before her marriage to Lieut. Ernest Regenthal Mrs. Regenthal was employed in the offices of the Elks club in Kenosha and was prominent here socially. Her parents reside in Milwaukee.

U. S. PROTEST ON SHIP FAILS TO STIR ARGENTINA

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

BUENOS AIRES, April 16.—The Argentine government is evidently determined not to intervene in the Martha Washington incident despite protests from the United States. Members of the cabinet are playing chess with American government representatives, the foreign minister referring them to the finance minister, who, in turn, insists that the case must be decided by President Irigoyen.

It was said in the foreign office this morning that Foreign Minister Pueyrredon had gone to his country estate and had not left any one authorized to act.

Persons near the government here appear to think that the strongest United States step would be not to permit shipping board vessels to call at Buenos Aires.

BERLIN POLICE ARREST GERMAN "PANCHO VILLA"

Max Hoelz Was Terror to Saxony District.

BY GEORGE SELDES.
[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

BERLIN, April 16.—[By wireless.]—In characteristic Teuton fashion, Max Hoelz, the leader of the recent German revolution, who is known as the "Red Ludendorff," and who in reality is the "Pancho Villa of Germany," has been arrested in Berlin.

A squad of police surrounded a restaurant in which he was quietly having a glass of beer, and three police inspectors entered and ordered pilsners. Max Hoelz arose, paid, and then left. The three grave inspectors followed. Out on the street they drew long machine gun revolvers.

"Hands up or we shoot," they cried.

"Shoot away; I am too tired to raise my hands," repiled the greatest bandit, smiling cynically.

Refuses to Raise Hands.

Max did not raise his hands and the three inspectors did not shoot. Instead they grabbed him and hauled him off to jail. Arrived at the police station, Max asked for cigarets and then chirped up with the familiar doughboy expression: "When do we eat?"

"Are you really Max Hoelz?" he was asked.

"I don't know; why don't you read the warrant and find out?" Max replied, and then he settled himself comfortably for a beauty nap.

The police then get busy and offered a reward of 50,000 marks for evidence against Max.

Hoelz, like Pancho Villa, organized a band of 100 men under the red flag. Both last March and this March, whenever a bomb was thrown anywhere in Germany, or a bridge blown up, or a machine gun fired, Max was blamed.

Was Terror in Saxony.

Max, commanding three auto trucks of followers, terrorized the Vogtland district in Saxony. Frequently signs saying "Max Hoelz was here" were found near a smouldering villa or a dynamited bank. The losses caused by the revolution in Saxony alone amounted to 9,000,000,000 marks.

The government offered a huge reward for his capture, but with no results. Max was seen everywhere, like Mark Twain's white elephant. He was blamed for a thousand crimes. But Max, himself, never stole a pfennig nor did he share in any stolen funds. He confessed that he lived on 250,000 marks which Lenin had sent him to defray the expenses of a trip to Russia.

Miss Florence Walton, former wife and dancing partner of Maurice Mauvet, who is named in James Stanley Joyce's annulment suit, was sued for $5,000 in the County court yesterday. E. H. Younglove, vice president of the Johns-Manville company, charges he and his wife suffered injuries when Miss Walton's automobile crashed into their machine several days ago at 47th street and Michigan boulevard.

This Utility Lowers Rates Because Coal Is Cheaper!

Camden, N. J., April 16.—The Hammonton Electric Light company has withdrawn an application for a 25 per cent increase in rates with the explanation that the price of coal has declined so greatly since the application was filed that there is no necessity now for the increase.

Literal Bill Gathers in All "Welcome" Door Mats

William Harris of 808 Cass street is a literal cuss. Seeing the word "Welcome" on half a dozen door mats, he thought he was welcome to them. He collected them and was arrested.

LUDENDORFF IN WAR UNIFORM AT KAISERIN RITES

Wilhelm Quits Castle to Visit Village.

BERLIN, April 16.—[By the Associated Press.]—A memorial service for former Empress Augusta Victoria was held here this morning, at which, according to the Kreuz Zeitung, Gen. von Seeckt, the chief of staff, appeared in uniform, as did Gen. Ludendorff, Gen. von Kluck, and many other former officers. Gen. Ludendorff was heartily cheered by the crowd.

The Prussian minister of the interior has forbidden police officials to attend the funeral of the former empress in uniform, with the exception of those used for forming cordons.

Monarchists Delay Funeral.

[Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable.]
[Copyright: 1921.]

BERLIN, April 16.—[By wireless.]—It will be remembered that the ex-kaiserin's funeral at Potsdam in the antique temple, or little mausoleum, was originally planned for Friday of this week, and no adequate explanation has come forth from the house of Doorn for the sudden postponement until Tuesday of next week.

It has since become quite clear that the postponement was suggested by the monarchists in Potsdam and Berlin, who soon began to realize from the indifference with which the news of the ex-kaiserin's death was received in Germany that if time was not given for agitation the funeral would turn out a very simple and "unpatriotic" affair, not at all calculated to serve the Hohenzollern cause.

Meanwhile, much has been done in that direction by the military clique and the clergy, omitting no occasion to hold memorials in churches and public halls wherever it could be done without encountering the antagonism of the great masses which, though not unkindly disposed toward the deceased lady, would certainly very drastically protest against monarchial demonstrations.

FUGITIVE FIGHTS ARREST.

Gus Goldblatt, alias Gilbert, was taken into custody by Chicago police yesterday at the request of Racine, Wis., officials. He is charged with carrying concealed weapons. Goldblatt resisted arrest and a lively encounter ensued, but he was subdued without any one being seriously hurt.

16 UNTRIED MEN CITY HALL'S PICK FOR BENCH JOBS

11 Sitting Judges at Least Slated for Discard.

BY PARKE BROWN.

At least sixteen "new and untried men," as the Chicago Bar association classifies them, are already listed for nomination on the Lundin-Thompson slate for the Circuit court.

As fifteen of the twenty sitting judges are Republicans, this means that at least eleven will be denied renomination by the plans of the city hall organization as they now stand. This statement agrees with reliable reports of the situation from a different angle—reports that only four of the sitting Republicans will be renamed by the city hall forces.

But an effort is being made to strengthen the slate because of alarm over the success of the negotiations for a coalition of the Brundage-Deneen Republicans with the Democrats behind a "sitting judge ticket," and some slight changes in the slate may be expected.

Here Is Reported Slate.

The sixteen new men now said to be on Fred Lundin's approved list are the following:

Edgar A. Jonas, former library trustee.

William Smith, assistant corporation counsel.

Eugene H. Dupee, assistant corporation counsel.

James W. Breen, assistant corporation counsel.

George A. Curran, assistant corporation counsel.

George Kandlik, assistant corporation counsel.

Henry T. Chace Jr., assistant corporation counsel.

Thomas J. Peden, assistant state's attorney.

Edward S. Day, assistant state's attorney.

Henry Utpatel, former alderman.

David K. Cochrane, former justice of the peace.

John Tyrrell, law associate of Charles V. Barrett.

William C. Hartray, former county commissioner.

John Richardson, Municipal court judge.

Benjamin B. Morris, Nineteenth ward.

W. F. Struckmann, former county attorney.

Lawyers' Association Acts.

On the motion of Harry W. Standidge, the Lawyers' association at its regular Saturday luncheon authorized the appointment of a committee to recommend what action, if any, the organization shall take in reference to the judicial election. President Chancellor appointed Mr. Standidge, A. A. Worsley, A. H. Ranes, A. D. Gash, and William Reeda.

The subject of a nonpartisan judiciary probably will be taken up at the annual meeting of the Woman's City club tomorrow.

"A lawyer who has long practiced in Cook county," said Miss Edith Rockwell, civic director of the club, "recently said that never before had he seen political bosses enter a courtroom and give instructions to the judge, but in recent months he has seen this flagrant flaunting of political power."

THIEF GETS TEN MONTHS.

John R. Egenfield, 739 North Clark street, captured April 13 after stealing a package containing $150 from Miss Dorothy Kind, a cashier for the John R. Thompson company, was sentenced to ten months in the House of Correction by Judge Haas. Egenfield pleaded he was broke and hungry.

HOOSIERS CHANT PÆAN OF STATE'S MANY PRODUCTS

Show Wares at Drake Hotel Banquet.

The Indiana Society of Chicago, which at various times and places has toasted its poets, its novelists, its generals, its vice presidents, the Fairbanks cocktail, and the Marshall 5 cent cigar, seized upon last night as the occasion for paying tribute to Indiana's business men and inventors.

The celebration, which took the form of an exhibition of Hoosier projects from dolls to windmills—and a dinner at which the guest of honor was Elwood Haynes, hailed as "builder of the first automobile," was held in the Drake hotel.

A roof, opposite the ballroom was filled with the exhibits. There were a wardrobe trunk, an electric sewing machine, a kitchen cabinet, a carved stone bath for birds, a miniature box car, a bonnet, an iceless ice box, a piano, a playground slide, a corset or two with brassiere to match, cigars, a phonograph, a watch, an automobile, and many other things.

Exhibits Given to Women.

These were all shown, explained, and demonstrated before the dinner.

It was announced that the exhibits, including the automobile, would be distributed among the women before the night was over.

There was a pageant during the dinner—"The Indiana Girl." George Ade wrote a poem which was read. It was about the girl of 100 years ago, the damsel of eighty years ago,—the linsey-woolsey girl, the hoopskirt girl, the girl of the bustle, the puff sleeve cutie, and the Michigan boulevard queen of 1920-'21.

Living Dolls and Movies.

There was a pageant of live dolls—a pretty girl coming out of a doll box, moving her arms and legs mechanically, speaking, calling Wilbur Nesbit "papa," and singing about a rose that was her heart.

This was followed by the moving pictures taken of the members of the society and their friends at Lucius Teter's "Oakmeadow" farm last fall. It was the first chance many had to see themselves as others saw them, and there was much fun.

John T. McCutcheon, the cartoonist, was there in the pictures and his wife and child.

"Cartoonists may be rotten spellers," commented Nesbit, "but they sure do have fine kids."

Gen. Leonard Wood was there. The movies made him seem in a terrible hurry to finish his meal.

Dr. William Covert Speaks.

Dr. William Chalmers Covert, speaking on "Industrial Indiana," claimed his right to talk on that subject by virtue of his apprenticeship in the apple butter, smoked hams, and other industries "in the soft soap era of the commonwealth."

The "soft soap" period, he said, gave way to the sophisticated period—beginning with the boys leaving the old farm and the old mortgage to see the film shows and work in the factories—and at the beginning of the war, industrial Indiana was sending out $809,000,000 worth of manufactured goods a year.

Mr. Haynes, introduced by Mr. Teter and made an honorary member of the society—sharing that distinction with Joseph G. Cannon and Thomas Marshall—told about his early days in the automobile industry.

It was twenty-seven years ago that Mr. Haynes demonstrated his automobile. That car is now in the Smithsonian institute. "When I drove it down Michigan avenue," he said, "half a dozen policemen sprang at me and made me get off the boulevard. I had to go down Wabash avenue, and it was full of snow and ice—and cobblestones. I don't know what objections the police had. That car couldn't run anybody down. It's fastest speed was seven miles."

Where's Industrial, Ind.?

They had a lot of fun boosting "Industrial Indiana." When it was all over a woman in the back row asked her escort:

"Bill, just where is Industrial, Indiana?"

OWNERS OF CITY TEAMS OBJECT TO INSURANCE RULE

Must Have Policies to Cover Damages.

Owners of the city's 700 garbage and ash wagon teams are stirred up over an executive order requiring that each team owner take out liability and indemnity insurance policies protecting the city against damage suits and claims filed under the workmen's compensation act. The liability policies cost $15.95 a year and the indemnity policies from $40 to $60, depending on the drivers' pay.

Yesterday it was charged that the ward superintendents, who are carrying out the executive order, are "slipping the boys red hot tips" that the Southern Surety company, in which Virtus Rohm, nephew of Fred Lundin, is said to be interested, is the best place to buy the insurance.

Risk Man Charges Trickery.

One insurance dealer charged that Assistant City Attorney W. T. Jones, assigned to the office of Commissioner of Public Works Francis for the insurance work, has refused to approve policies unless purchased from the Southern concern.

"This work is rendered necessary by a recent Supreme court decision holding that the city is liable for the acts of its teams even though it does not own the teams and does not hire the drivers," Mr. Jones said. "The charge I am favoring the Southern company is untrue. I have approved policies of the Hartford Accident and Indemnity company, the U. S. Fidelity and Guaranty company, Aetna Life Insurance company, the U. S. Casualty company, the Maryland Casualty company, and a half dozen others.

Why Southern Gets Business.

"Some business is going to the Southern company. That is only natural, as team owners as a rule are political workers, and therefore naturally go into a company in which they think their political allies are interested."

The city hereafter will require employés who own automobiles maintained by the city to file indemnity bonds protecting the city against damage done by the automobiles.

His Unexpected Visit Wins Divorce for Hotel Clerk

Gerald A. Smith, a hotel clerk, told Judge Lewis yesterday that he learned "a lot of things about the wife" when he made a surprise visit to her home in Milwaukee last October. "I had to wait till midnight before she came home," he testified. "Finally I saw a taxicab draw up. Through the curtains I saw my wife sitting on a man's lap." The judge granted him a divorce.

"Save It, Young Man, Save It!"

An ambitious young man once asked the late E. H. Harriman how to be successful.

"Well, I'd take $5,000—," began Mr. Harriman.

"But I haven't any money," interrupted his questioner.

"Haven't $5,000? Then go out and save it, young man, save it!"

YOUNG MEN who are wide awake appreciate that their success or failure at fifty depends upon how determinedly they save during the period of their greatest earning capacity. We, in HALSEY, STUART & CO., also appreciate this fact.

The young man who buys bonds on our partial payment plan today is the successful man of ten and twenty years hence. His future bond buying business will be worth handling. We believe it good business of the most enlightened sort to make special efforts to help young men save, especially to save by getting the bond buying habit.

Largely with this thought in mind, we instituted some time ago Halsey, Stuart & Co.'s Partial Payment Plan under the terms of which you may purchase any of our bonds in partial payments, extending, if desired, over a ten months' period.

From the time of your first payment of 10% or more of the par amount of your purchase you obtain 6% interest on your money until payments are completed. Payments may be made monthly or semi-monthly in amounts sufficient to retire at least 10% of the unpaid balance in each of the ten months succeeding first payment.

The plan combines systematic saving with conservative investment and a more liberal return than would ordinarily be available with the same degree of safety elsewhere. To young men especially, and to all who are interested in systematic accumulation, we recommend this plan.

Additional details regarding the plan are contained in our booklet C. A. 6, which will be sent on request together with our list of offerings

CITY'S EXPERTS COST $3,500,000 OVER USUAL FEES

Realty Board's Figures in 4 Cities Contrasted.

BY OSCAR E. HEWITT.

The city of Chicago is in the process of paying $4,891,528 to three real estate and two building experts for their services, since Nov. 4, 1919, on six street improvements.

This same service could have been obtained for $3,500,000 less, according to the published appraisal rates of the Chicago, New York, Cleveland or St. Louis Real Estate boards—even after adding the city's large allowance of $539,261 for rough plans and drawings of buildings. This $539,261 was said by all experts consulted last week to be an excessive figure.

"You will make THE TRIBUNE and yourself look foolish by adding that amount to the rates of the real estate boards," commented one specialist of merit in appraisal work.

But add the $539,261 to the rates of each of the selected real estate boards—just to be more than fair—and the total charge of each would be $3,500,000 under what the city is paying.

The following little table contrasts what the city is paying with the rates of each board, plus $539,261:

The city is paying—	Amount.
Real estate experts	$2,015,465
Building experts	2,876,063
Total	$4,891,528

Real estate board of—	Saving.
Chicago	$3,596,165
St. Louis	3,574,293
Cleveland	3,641,768
New York	3,997,717

If the $539,261 were withdrawn from these totals for each board the services would be obtained for $4,000,000 less than the city of Chicago is paying. Aside from the addition of the $539,261, the total charges ascribed to each real estate board have been liberally reckoned. That has increased the charge of the boards against the city. Prominent members of the Chicago Real Estate board have made appraisals below the published rates, used in the above calculation.

How Two Experts Get Fees.

The city of Chicago pays its two building experts, Frank H. Mesce and Austin J. Lynch, 2 per cent of the value of the buildings they appraise. Of this total three-quarters of 1 per cent is for the preparation of diagrams and blue prints of buildings. This three-quarters of 1 per cent for one expert totals $539,261. The other expert receives the same amount and is supposed to make duplicate diagrams and blue prints of the same buildings. Two persons qualified to speak on this subject said last week that one set of plans is sufficient and that "two sets are half waste."

On South Water street there are 188 buildings which the city says have a total value of $4,430,015. For appraising them Mesce and Lynch are collecting $177,200. For the same service the Chicago Real Estate board's rates total only $4,500, minus the pictures. But adding the price the city is paying Mesce or Lynch for drawings, the real estate board's total would be $47,725. On the same basis the charge of the Cleveland real estate board would be $42,610 and the New York real estate board's charge only $37,210.

As to Real Estate Experts.

But the city has three real estate experts in Ernest H. Lyons, Edward C. Waller Jr., and Arthur S. Merigold, who are dividing between themselves $2,015,464.

The Chicago, as well as the other real estate boards, supply valuators who will appraise both land and building and give a certificate of valuation showing the value of each.

Again, take South Water street for illustration purposes. The city says that the eighty-two parcels of land involved are worth $5,700,000. To appraise that property the city's three real estate experts are collecting $170,999. The Chicago Real Estate board rates on the same job would be $10,619. The St. Louis real estate board's price would be $16,299, while the Cleveland board would ask only $5,699, and the New York board less than $4,000. The Cook County Real Estate Board of Chicago would charge $8,569 if it engaged in such appraisals, but it is a rule of that organization to refuse appraisal work in special assessment cases.

Circus Riding Is "Formal" Now

GRACE AND ELIZABETH HANNEFORD.

Instead of appearing in tights, the circus riders of today go through their stunts gowned as for a formal ball.

Time was when the reformers viewed with holy horror the beautiful circus rider with her spangled tights and twinkling limbs. Not so now. In the "Poodles" Hanneford troupe with the Sells-Floto circus now at the Coliseum, the women riders perform all the old stunts and many new ones arrayed in formal evening dress. Grace Hanneford, wife of "Poodles," whom the press agents proclaim "the greatest living equestrian comedian," and his sister, Elizabeth, are pictured above as they appear at the Coliseum. It was "Poodles" who brought about this innovation under the "big tops."

This is the last week of the circus here.

HUGHES BEATEN IN AUSTRALIA BUT REFUSES TO QUIT

LONDON, April 16.—Australian advices today report a defeat sustained yesterday by the government of Premier Hughes in parliament at Melbourne, but declared the adverse vote was purely accidental and does not mean necessarily that the government is under obligation to resign.

Premier Hughes, the messages show, immediately moved the adjournment of the house as a means of testing its opinion on the occurrence, and as the house accepted his authority in this matter without dissent it is expected, say the advices, that the incident will be straightened out.

In a formal statement Premier Hughes declared it would be impossible for him to attend the conference of British empire premiers in London in June unless the house made it clear that the vote in no way constituted a vote of censure.

FALLS DEAD ON WAY TO WORK.

Frank Wabb, 5419 South Hoyne avenue, was suddenly taken ill yesterday at 54th street and Hoyne avenue on his way to work and sat down on the curbing to rest. A moment later he toppled over dead. Heart disease.

CITY HALL TAXES MERIT MEN TO KEEP HORN GOING

'Get 'Em All,' Cry in Drive for Official Paper.

City civil service employés were hit yesterday by the Lundin-Thompson drive to heap up the war chest for the June judicial election and to increase the circulation of The Republican, journalistic mouthpiece of the city hall.

The goal of the machine leaders is reported to be $500,000. The first step in the campaign was the recent banquet of the William Hale Thompson club, for which it was announced that more than 1,000 tickets at $100 a plate had been purchased. Assessments on saloonkeepers and other members of the club and the sale of tickets at $1.10 each, including war tax, for a big picnic to be held in Riverview park in July are other means being taken to provide the sinews of political war.

The campaign for subscriptions to The Republican is to include every jobholder—political and civil service—who holds positions controlled by the Lundin-Thompson machine, it is said.

"Get 'Em All," Is Warcry.

The method used is businesslike. The watchword is "Get 'em all." Here is the way the drive was handled by Chief Clerk Roy J. Battis, a "temporary" or political appointee in the office of City Controller George F. Harding:

At 5 o'clock, the quitting hour, every employé was directed to pass in line by the chief clerk's desk. There were men in line who have held city jobs under the merit system for more than twenty years.

"Your mayor," said Mr. Battis, "has tried to help city employés get what they have asked for. Now we ask that you help us by taking a book of five subscriptions to The Republican. The price is $10, payable in advance."

In front of Mr. Battis, when the line had cleared away, was a stack of paper currency. Only a few of the pile of subscription books remained. The name of every employé caught in the dragnet had been checked off on a list which the chief clerk had before him. Deputy Controller L. E. Gosselin, a civil service man, bought a book. So did Controller Harding's civil service office boy.

So far as could be learned, there were few refusals to obey the pointed request to "kick in."

"Rawest Grab I Ever Saw."

"I told them to go plumb to hell," said one civil service employé in the corridor later. "It was the rawest grab I have seen and I have been around here more than fifteen years. I've given the city a dolar's worth of service for each dollar I've received. I owe this crew nothing. They'll not get a dime out of me, if they take me to the trial board."

But his attitude was exceptional. The rank and file took the situation philosophically.

"Practically all came through," said another civil service veteran. "You see, we are getting well trained by this time."

"Did you see that pile of Riverview tickets on the desk? I suppose that will be next," said a junior clerk.

Mr. Battis tried to sell a book to a TRIBUNE reported.

"Nobody is barred in this drive," he announced as he counted up the receipts.

And No Return Privilege!

"Do they turn back the books if they can't sell the five subscriptions?" the reporter asked innocently.

"No; I wouldn't think much of any one who would do that," Battis replied. "I take the money when they get the book. It's a pretty poor sort of fellow who hasn't five friends to whom he can sell a subscription."

"Does Controller Harding know about this?" asked the reporter, eyeing the pile of bills.

"We never do anything around here he doesn't know about," was the answer. "We follow orders."

"Who gave you the books and the orders?"

"Inside," said Battis, pointing over his shoulder to the offices of Controller Harding and Deputy Controller Gosselin. "Anyway, why pick on me? Why pick on this office? They are doing it all over the hall, I hear."

"Don't Mix Me Up in This."

The reporter went "inside," where Mr. Gosselin sat contemplating the $10 book he had just purchased.

"Don't mix me up in this," he said, when the book subject was mentioned. "I'm not handling it. Don't know anything about it. Get out or change the subject."

A block of 125 subscription blanks was left on the desk of one city hall official. He calmly wrote out a check for $250—about three weeks' pay—and told his stenographer to "give it to The Republican man."

William Stocker, city sealer, is in general charge of the campaign to boost the circulation of the city hall paper.

CHILDREN TAKE CURTAIN CALL IN N. Y. SCANDALS

Andrews, Stillman, Stokes Plays Near Last Acts.

New York, April 16.—[Special.] Youngsters are going to take the leading rôles in the final acts of the three marital plays being staged here.

When the family skeletons of the "coöperative" husband, or Andrews [illegible] have been fully viewed, the [illegible] will consider in each case the "best way out" for the "sake of the children."

Andrews and Stillmans.

"For the sake of the children" Mrs. Maud A. Andrews, wife No. 1 in the case of Herbert T. Andrews, Wall street broker, shared her fashionable apartment home with Andrews and wife No. 2, Mrs. Esther Marie Andrews, young, and "fond of dancing and good times."

"For the sake of the children" Mrs. "Fifi" Stillman refused at first to put up a fight against the charges of her brother husband. Later she opened an attack in reply to his charges that almost shook him from his position in the financial world. Stillman had challenged the legitimacy of Guy Stillman, 29 months old. The other children bearing the Stillman name involved are Anne, 20; "Bud," 17; Alexander, 11.

There is Jay Leeds, 31 months old, to be considered, too. He is the son of "Mrs. Florence Leeds," one time chorus beauty, involved in the affairs of Stillman.

Stokes Children Involved.

In the Stokes case three children are to be thought of in the final reckoning. W. E. D. Stokes, rich and aged husband of young Mrs. Helen Elwood Stokes, charged one of his sons by a former marriage as co-respondent, but withdrew the charge at the trial, now on. Yesterday it was learned that Mrs. Stokes, battling for her good name and for the "sake of the children," had spurned, two years ago, Stokes' offer of $1,500 a month alimony and one-third of his property, estimated at $25,000,000, for her children.

The Stokes trial is nearing the end. Monday Mrs. Stokes may take the witness stand. Her attorneys today hinted about a diary of her married life with Stokes and said it will be introduced. The "Pussy-cat" letter Stokes wrote to his children about Mrs. Stokes, also is to be introduced in evidence.

The Stillman case will be resumed in secret session May 4.

Mrs. Andrews No. 1 and her children must find a new apartment by Tuesday. Eviction notice was served on her, because of her husband's affair with the former stenographer-telephone girl he married and brought home.

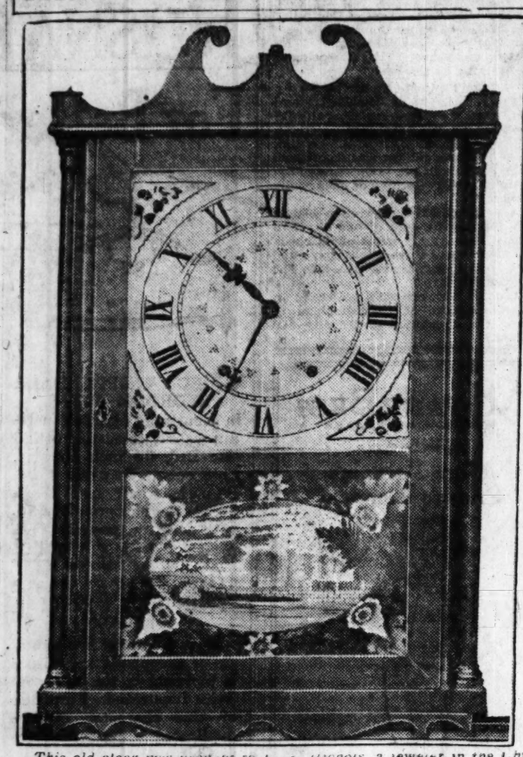
Andrews Hunts Wife No. 2.

Andrews disappeared from this city tonight. According to his attorney and his friends, he departed to search for Mrs. Andrews No. 2, who followed the example of wife No. 1 and quit the broker on Thursday.

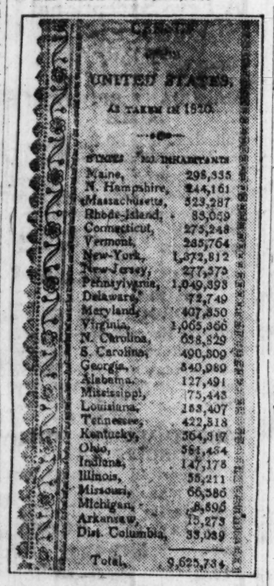
The "woman of mystery," the one who has offered to aid the broker with money and testimony, made her entrance into the case confidentially. She is an employé of Andrews.

"I don't want my name used," she said. "But I have the facts to explain away all these charges with regard to the first marriage and the bigamy charge. Herbert is the victim of ugly Wall street enemies. One of them stole $100,000 and the other was arrested for grand larceny. Herbert showed them up and they are trying to get him."

FIRST 100 YEARS THE HARDEST



This old clock was brought to I. W. Nichols, a jeweler in the Chicago Savings Bank building, to be cleaned. Yesterday Mr. Nichols opened the clock and found therein a tablet carrying the United States census figures of 1820, indicating the clock is at least 101 years old. It is still in good running order, the jeweler says, needing only a cleaning to keep up its registration of the fleeting steps of Father Time. In 1820, the census figures show, the population of the then twenty-seven states of our union was 9,625,734.



If the U. S. census of 1820 interests you, here are the figures on the tablet found in the old clock.

THIS CLOCK HAS PACED DAD TIME FOR 101 YEARS

1820 Census Table Is Found in Works.

The first hundred years were the hardest for this clock. If Mr. Einstein's theories are correct, this venerable mechanism, could its tick-tick-ing be interpreted, might be able to clear up some of the puzzling matters of relativity. Scientists say it is now eligible to run in Mr. Einstein's four dimensional space-time continuum, because of its advanceed age.

The age of the clock was discovered yesterday by I. W. Nichols, jeweler in the Chicago Savings Bank building, to whom it had been brought for a centurial cleaning. Opening the face of the clock, Mr. Nichols found a placard which told the census of the states in 1820.

Being interested in relativity and other matters which are said to affect the running of clocks, Mr. Nichols with pencil and paper figured some interesting things.

Ticks off 60 Million Seconds.

He found the clock had passed around the sun 101 times, had ticked off nearly 60,000,000 seconds, that the hour hand had traveled around the clock's face near 1,000,000 times, and that the chimes had pealed off the hours and half hours nearly 13,000,000 times. All this during the administration of twenty-two Presidents, which has nothing to do with Einstein.

"The clock is still in good running order," Mr. Nichols declared. "Just needs a little cleaning. The machinery is made of good material. The frame is of wood, and there is an oil painting on the front which might show the midnight ride of Paul Revere, for all I know.

"It was brought in, I think, by Mrs. Catherine Veits. She never left a name; we just gave her a number.

"As far as Einstein is concerned, I expect the clock has lived long enough to corroborate one of his theories—that it keeps different time according to whether it is placed on the floor or the table. Maybe the clock knows more. Who can discover its secrets?"

The clock's census figures cover twenty-seven states, including the District of Columbia. At that time the population of Illinois was 55,211. New York state stood first with 1,372,812. Indiana boasted 147,178, and Michigan only 8,896. Wisconsin was unheard of. The total population of the states was 9,625,734.

COLLEGE NEWS BY RADIO, PLAN OF 43 UNIVERSITIES

Cambridge, Mass., April 16.—Plans for the exchange of college news by radio were made today at the intercollegiate conference on undergraduate government, meeting at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

A wide range of subjects was discussed during the two days' conference, the delegates being divided into four sections to facilitate the work. The section considering musical club activities favored the substitution of tuxedos for full dress clothes at college musical functions.

Delegates considering athletics unanimously opposed the offering of special inducements to high school athletes, although some admitted that this had been done.

Body of Missing Girl, 8, Found in Pittsburgh Stable

Pittsburgh, Pa., April 16.—The body of Nadine Kramer, 8, who disappeared from her home on the north side here five days ago, was found tonight in a stable by the father and other relatives. The body, bearing many marks of violence, was lodged in a hole in the floor.

RAIL MEN MAKE FIRST MOVE FOR NEW WORK RULES

Plan Road Parleys Today at Meetings Here.

The first move toward substituting new rules for the national working agreements which, by the decision rendered last Thursday by the railroad labor board, terminate July 1, will be made today by rail union leaders.

Plans for conferences with railway managements throughout the country, as directed by the board's decision, will be outlined at a meeting of officials of thirteen railway employés' organizations. B. M. Jewell, president of the railway employés' department of the American Federation of Labor, will preside. The heads of the four big brotherhoods also will meet today.

Need 5,000 Men for Railways.

"We have a big task ahead of us and comparatively little time in which to perform it," said Mr. Jewell last night. "The board's ruling says we must enter into individual conferences with each of the roads and report results before July 1. We recently estimated it would require 5,000 men to carry on these conferences. It will be difficult to select so many competent men."

Railroad executives have made no announcement as to their plans for arranging conferences with employés.

Union leaders said an effort may be made to arrange regional conferences with groups of small roads which operate under virtually the same conditions.

The meeting today probably will be held at the railway employés' department headquarters, 4750 Broadway. Other conferences will be held there or in a larger nearby hall throughout the week. Between 300 and 400 general chairmen have been summoned to attend these.

The brotherhood chiefs will meet in the Great Northern hotel. The brotherhoods are not parties to the national agreements, having individual agreements with each road, but are seeking some changes. They have authority to negotiate rules with individual carriers in the same manner as those unions still working under the national agreements.

Name New Rail Board Men.

Appointments of members of the railroad labor board to succeed the three whose one year terms expired last Thursday were announced from Washington yesterday. The new members are:

WALTER L. McMENIMEN of Massachusetts, deputy president of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, succeeding J. J. Forrester of Washington, D. C., as labor representative.

SAMUEL HIGGINS of New York, former general manager of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, succeeding W. L. Park of Chicago as railway executive member.

BEN W. HOOPER, former governor of Tennessee, succeeding Henry T. Hunt of Cincinnati as the public representative on the labor board.

Mrs. Bessie Swift Fernald, daughter of Louis F. Swift, the packer, left her entire estate of $350,000 to her father, to be disposed of according to his best judgment, according to her will, admitted to probate yesterday.

The document consists of little more than a page of text, and after naming Mr. Swift as executor, with her brother Alden as his successor in the event of the father's death, continues regarding the latter:

"It is my desire that he shall divide said estate in such manner and among such parties as in his discretion he may think best, and I hereby release him from liability to account for same."

J. H. Arnold, secretary to Louis F. Swift, testified Mrs. Fernald had divorced her husband, Charles Fernald, in 1912. The estate, it was intimated by Attorney George J. Arnold, consists mostly of Liberty bonds and holdings in the various Swift companies.

TAKE NEW YORKER HERE AS $100,000 CONFIDENCE MAN

Waring Thomas, who says he has a brokerage office at 32 Broadway, New York, was arrested in the Drake hotel yesterday by Detective Sergeants Carten and McFarland. He is charged with operating a confidence game which is alleged to have netted $100,000 from farmers and business men in Illinois and Iowa.

The warrant was brought from Lewistown, Ill., by Sheriff Guy Will of Fulton county. John Smith, a farmer near Genesee, Ill., is said to have given Thomas $12,000 in an oil deal. Thomas also is said to have obtain $10,000 from A. P. Brown, a business man of Fort Madison, Ia.

Thomas said he organized the Thomas Petroleum syndicate to develop land in Oklahoma. No oil has yet been found, he said, but he declares he put $15,000 of his own money into the venture. He said he would fight extradition from Cook county.

CONFIRM HARVEY AND HERRICK IN SECRET SESSION

Washington, D. C., April 16.—Nominations of George Harvey of New York to be ambassador to Great Britain and Myron T. Herrick of Ohio to be ambassador to France were confirmed today by the senate.

The vote on confirmation of Col. Harvey's nomination was 47 to 20, it was announced.

The confirmation of Col. Harvey was taken up in executive session after Senator Lodge, the Republican leader, had objected to the request of Senator Harrison, Democrat, Mississippi, for consideration in open session.

Two men had taken his cab, coat, and cap at Washington boulevard, and Tallman avenue, he said.

FRANCE TO TAKE KRUPPS UNLESS BERLIN PAYS UP

Allies Decide on Ruhr Basin Sanction.

BY HENRY WALES.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS, April 16.—[By Wireless.]—Occupation of the Ruhr basin involving 200,000 troops, with the exploitation by the French of the mines and factories, including the Krupps, was the sole sanction definitely reported at yesterday's conference at the Elysee palace, according to information received from an authoritative source.

Owing to the fact that France alone must furnish the troops, it is necessary to call up two classes to the colors—1918 and 1919—to raise sufficient effectives to carry out the operation.

Although the military chiefs prefer a more extended occupation in Germany, including the seizure of Westphalia, the political heads hesitate to adopt measures requiring perhaps more than 500,000 soldiers to execute.

U. S. to Be Notified.

At the conference yesterday it was decided to notify the allied powers and the United States the exact scope of the military enterprises to be taken before the troops started going forward in order to avoid a repetition of the Frankfort occupation which the British disavowed on the pretext that the step was taken without their cognizance.

The allies and America will have time to formulate any suggestions or modifications to the French military operations before the sanctions are taken.

The French believe that Germany is merely "stalling for time and is trying to bluff them out of taking military action independently, since the British and Italians will not participate, so Premier Briand and Marshal Foch are going ahead preparing plans regardless of the semi-official Berlin statements saying that Foreign Minister Simons is preparing a new, attractive reparations offer.

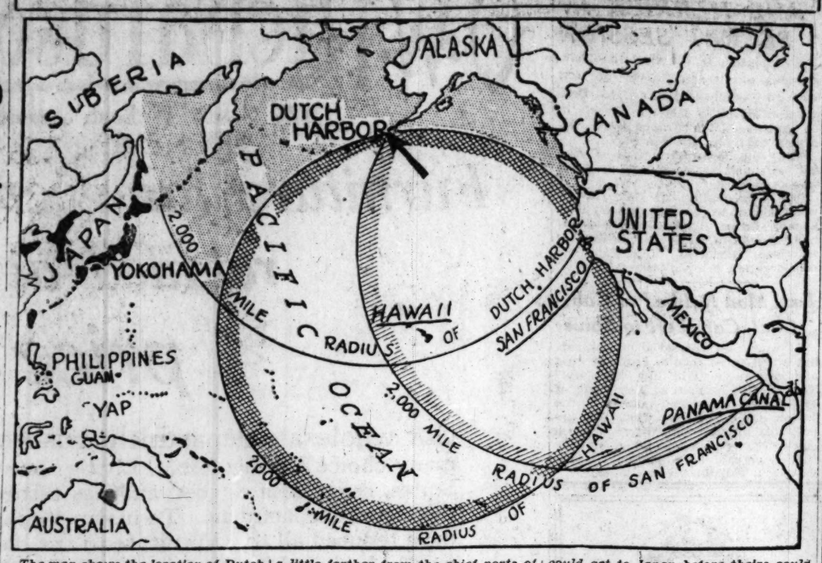
To Query U. S. on Debt.

It is reported that Germany is about to ask the United States if she will consent to the French, British, Belgian, and Italian war debts being transferred to Germany in lieu of reparations, permitting the Teutons to pay the United States direct at the expiration of a long term.

It is reported that the supreme council will meet at Ostend, Belgium, in the middle of May, and President Harding will be invited to send a representative.

Stephane Lauzanne announced to the nation this morning that President Harding had decided that Ambassador Wallace would rejoin the council of ambassadors and that Roland Boyden would rejoin the reparations commission. The United States embassy has received no instructions to that effect and Mr. Boyden is now in Constantinople. His office here is without any news of the alleged decision.

HOW U. S. COULD DOMINATE THE PACIFIC



The map shows the location of Dutch Harbor, out on the tip of Alaska. If this spot were made into a naval base it would dominate the whole northern Pacific ocean. Dutch Harbor, San Francisco, and Hawaii are about 2,000 miles from each other, and Dutch Harbor, lying so much to the north, is only a little farther from the chief ports of Japan than it is from San Francisco. In case of war this spot could determine the ownership of the Pacific waters. It has been pointed out that if we had a base here Japan could not attack the Philippines or Guam, down off the coast of Asia, because our fleet could get to Japan before theirs could get back.

Dutch Harbor lies in the Japan current, the counterpart of the gulf stream in the Pacific ocean, and although it is near the arctic circle, it has a very mild and temperate climate, not unlike that of our middle southern states.

PACIFIC LACKS NAVAL BASES IN CRITICAL PERIOD

No Facilities There for United Fleet.

home port of the most powerful foreign fleet in the Pacific, it occupies a more commanding position than Honolulu. Dutch Harbor is only 2,500 miles from Yokohama, while Honolulu is more than 3,500 miles from Yokohama. This difference of 1,000 miles represents approximately twenty hours of steaming time for the American fleet.

In an offensive movement directed against the Pacific coast from the other side of the ocean this difference in distances becomes a matter of paramount importance. The Yokohama fleet could not afford to steam toward Pearl Harbor if its commander were advised that an American fleet was based upon Dutch Harbor, for the reason that our fleet, being 1,000 miles nearer Yokohama, would be able to intrude itself in the rear of any fleet that was headed for Pearl Harbor and thus cut it off from its home port. This is an advantage that the commander of the Yokohama fleet would not yield to the American commander.

If a strong American fleet, it is asserted, were properly equipped with a base at Dutch Harbor a fleet could not be sent from Yokohoma in the direction of Manila, which is over 1,500 miles away, for the reason that it could not steam there and back before the American fleet would be able to place itself before Yokohama and prevent the Japanese fleet from returning to its home port. A movement to Manila would give an American commander of a fleet based upon Dutch Harbor just the opportunity that he would be seeking in the event of war with any Asiatic power. Neither could a fleet from Yokohama steam to Yap, Guam, or even to Jaluit, which, according to reports, is to be the advance base of the Japanese fleet. All of these points are more than 2,000 miles from Yokohama and as a consequence they would be dominated by a fleet based on Dutch Harbor.

The official weather records show that the thermometer has never reached zero at Dutch Harbor.

BRITAIN SEES JUSTICE IN U. S. STAND ON YAP

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

LONDON, April 16.—The first British comment on President Harding's message to congress was contained in an editorial in the London Times today, which begins by accepting the American position regarding as Yap as put forth in the American note of April 4.

The Times also recognizes President Harding's rejection of the covenant of the league of nations as being absolute, but welcomes his desire for an association of nations to promote peace. It also is pleased by his reference to just reparations and German responsibility for the war.

American adhesion to the peace treaty depends on the allies' replies to the American note on mandates and in particular on the island of Yap, says the Times. It then declares it is assured that if the answer on Yap be favorable the United States will take part in the execution of the peace treaty, within a certain degree.

JAPAN STOCKS UP ON PLANES AND MATERIALS

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

LONDON, April 16.—According to authoritative information Japan is greatly increasing its air force. During March it purchased from the British disposal board aeroplane material, principally engines, valued at £429,000. This represents but a fraction of the value of purchases made in France and Italy.

The Avro school at Hamble, near Southampton, has been turning out Japanese pilots at the rate of thirty-six every six weeks. The Avro factory is working at war capacity on Japanese orders, but its inability to fill all its contracts has resulted in a decision to establish a factory in Japan.

Thomas Sopwith, one of the leading British aeroplane designers, is sending a corps of personally trained designers to Japan.

FAIL TO GET ARMY O. K.

Washington, D. C., April 16.—Improvement of Scituate harbor, Massachusetts, and the Neches river, Texas, between Beaumont and the mouth of the Angelina river, is inadvisable, the army engineer corps advised the house today after a survey.

uniform heat day and night simpler than electric light

NOKOL—What It Is

NOKOL is a simple automatic appliance that burns oil with a clean, sootless, odorless flame. It can be installed in any coal furnace—steam, vapor, hot water or hot air—in half a day or less, without changing the furnace. If you move, you can take it with you. Oil is burned only when heat is needed, thus maintaining an even temperature at all hours, in all kinds of weather.

NOKOL automatic oil heating is absolutely safe. It is unreservedly approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters and is the only oil burning device for heating the home so approved.

NOKOL DOES THE WORK OF COAL IN A BETTER WAY

NOKOL will operate your present heating system more efficiently than any coal ever could. Oil has a higher thermal value than coal and NOKOL burns every atom of its oil completely, without waste. Your dollar buys approximately 22% more heat with oil than with coal.

NOKOL, being smokeless, eliminates all the soot deposit, which greatly reduces the efficiency of all coal-fired boilers. Even 1/10 inch of soot on heating surfaces decreases the average furnace efficiency 26.2%. NOKOL makes every penny spent for heating do its whole duty. You get what you pay for—complete heating satisfaction.

The coal-fired furnace cannot maintain an even house temperature. In severe weather the variation is as much as 25 degrees or more. Under the same weather conditions the temperature maintained by NOKOL varies less than 2 degrees in 24 hours.

NOKOL IS CONVENIENT, CLEAN AND HEALTHFUL

NOKOL is operated and governed by a positive automatic device which makes it work without labor. It takes care of itself.

NOKOL supplies clean heat just as an electric bulb supplies clean light. There are never any ashes or dirt. The furnace room can be kept as clean as the living room.

NOKOL heat is always on tap—in just the amount you wish. When the weather turns cold, NOKOL goes to work. If the weather warms up, NOKOL rests. In either case you always have uniform, healthful, dependable heat.

OIL IS THE CLEAN, WASTELESS FUEL

It requires no handling and can be poured into your supply tank directly from the oil tank wagon without tracking mud and dirt into your house, destroying shrubbery or breaking basement windows. There is a gauge on your oil tank—you know that you get the fuel you pay for!

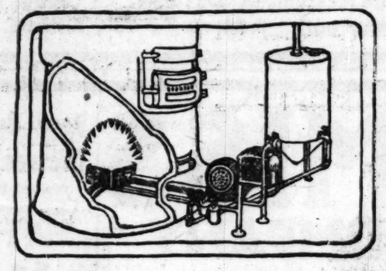
THE WORLD MOVES—ARE YOU MOVING WITH IT?

NOKOL heat is simpler than electric light. It turns itself on and off. You light it once a year and forget about it. It is absolutely automatic, absolutely safe, absolutely clean—no dirt, no ashes, no dust, no smoke, no soot, no trouble of any kind—not even any WORK!



WHAT IS NOKOL WORTH?

Even temperature and freedom from dust are the two greatest safeguards to health known to modern sanitation. Nothing on earth except NOKOL can give you clean heat or an even temperature.

What is even, dependable, automatic heat worth to you? What are health and cleanliness worth to you? What are freedom from furnace troubles worth to you—or to your wife?

You can best answer these questions yourself. The worth of NOKOL cannot be over-estimated.

WHAT DOES NOKOL COST?

NOKOL will save its cost to you eventually in the saving of doctors' bills alone. It will save its cost eventually in cleaning bills alone.

If you employ a janitor, NOKOL will save its cost very quickly in janitor's wages alone, and will give you the service you pay the janitor for and do not get—constant heat, uniform heat, and clean heat—service that no human being can give you, at any price, so long as you burn coal. NOKOL gives you these things without work or trouble of any kind, automatically and all the time.

NOKOL COSTS NOTHING, IN REALITY, BECAUSE IT PAYS FOR ITSELF AND MORE

NOKOL returns its cost in so many ways—in actual dollars and cents—that it represents a profit, not an expense.

Yet its biggest returns are not in money saved, but in service rendered—in health, comfort, cleanliness, freedom from drudgery, from the uncertainties of coal supply and prices—in short, its biggest returns are in human HAPPINESS!

no coal, no dirt
no ashes, no dust
no soot, no smoke
no work

WHAT DOES COAL BURNING MEAN TO YOU?

Does it not mean a succession of worries over the possible scarcity and high prices of coal—a big investment in the spring for something you don't want until fall—constant trips to a dirty basement, hard work, soiling of hands and clothes, perhaps when you are "dressed up"—a cold house in the morning—an overheated house at night or on mild days—opening of windows to cool off—sneezing, catching of colds, ending, perhaps, in serious illness—constant cleaning of curtains, rugs and furniture—a succession of worries, danger and expense—constant losses of time, temper and money—with no satisfactory result to compensate you for it?

WHAT DOES NOKOL MEAN?

It means clean, even heat every hour of the day and night, heat just when and where you want it; no cold rooms in the morning, no overheating, no dangerous draughts with their train of illness, loss of time and doctor's bills, no furnace troubles, no dirty basement drudgery, no ashes, no dust, no smoke, no soot—a basement as clean as your living rooms, a fit place for children to play in, to hang dainty clothes in, or to use as a billiard room, workshop or den.

NOKOL IS NOT AN EXPERIMENT

NOKOL is not new or experimental in any way. It is the demonstrated heating success of the century! Thousands of NOKOL Heaters are in successful use throughout the country—more than 1000 in Chicago and nearby suburbs alone.

Now is the time to act, if you want a NOKOL Heater at the lowest price of the year. Read the offer, tear off the coupon now, act at once, and save $91.

SPECIAL FREE DEMONSTRATION THIS WEEK

See the NOKOL Heater in operation now at our convenient salesrooms in the new shopping district, at 211 North Michigan Avenue, just north of Lake Street—only 2½ blocks from Marshall Field's and only 1½ blocks from the Public Library.

WHY NOKOL IS CHEAPER NOW

Principally because most people put off thinking about heat until they want it. Then everybody wants it at once. In the fall we have more business than we can handle. Hundreds who wanted NOKOL were disappointed last fall and were compelled to go through another winter of coal drudgery, dirt and inconvenience.

It is worth money to us to keep our sales and working forces busy throughout the year, and it is worth a great deal to you to have NOKOL service when you want it. Therefore, in order to distribute our business more evenly throughout the year, to save you the annoyance of waiting your turn in the rush season, or possibly going without NOKOL altogether, we have adopted the plan of offering you a big cash saving if you will place your orders early in the year.

NOKOL heaters will be sold hereafter on the graduated price basis, just as coal is sold, the lowest price being in April and increasing each month thereafter until August 1, when the full regular price will be in effect.

The price of the NOKOL Heater, completely installed and ready for service, is $455. During April NOKOL is offered completely installed for $364—a clear cash saving of $91 if you act at once.

TIME PAYMENTS IF DESIRED

If you do not wish to pay for your NOKOL Heater all at once, a small cash payment will secure installation for you, and easy monthly payments may be arranged.

We are making it easy for you to buy NOKOL now; there is no reason for delay. Act at once, save $91 in cash and insure perfect heating service for next fall and winter.

NOKOL can be installed in any furnace or boiler, old or new, within a few hours' time. If you move, it can be taken with you and installed in your new home.

ACT NOW IF YOU WANT THE APRIL PRICE

Tear off the coupon now before you forget it and arrange to see a special free demonstration of NOKOL heating at our salesrooms this week. Don't put it off, as the April quota of heaters will go quickly. If you cannot come in at once, mail the coupon and make a reservation. A NOKOL Heater will be reserved for you without obligation for one week, if you cannot come in earlier than that.

Why put off longer the comfort, convenience and economy of NOKOL heating when you can just as well have it now at a tremendous saving and on easy payments if desired? Cut the coupon NOW.

EMERGENCY BILL DRAWN TO CHECK BUILDING GRAFT

Architects Seek to Make Bribery a Felony.

An emergency bill making the demand or acceptance of a bribe a felony instead of a misdemeanor will be introduced at Springfield Wednesday as the result of testimony before the joint legislative building inquiry yesterday. It will be introduced in the senate by Senator Dailey and in the house by Minority Leader John Devine.

The proposed law is one of three suggested by the Illinois Society of Architects in a letter to Senator Dailey. Another law suggested would make it a misdemeanor to substitute materials of lesser quality than those contracted for. The third suggestion would make every trade union and contractors' association incorporate under the state laws, and file bonds to guarantee all agreements would be carried out. This measure would provide compulsory arbitration of disputes between builders and the unions.

To Subpoena Union Leaders.

Some union leaders who have failed to cooperate with the committee will be subpoenaed and questioned by the committee Monday, it was announced. Members of the committee stated indictments probably would be asked after these men have testified.

Evidence proving the existence of a brick trust was unearthed by the committee, it was learned. The committee has secured a contract indicating the Hatfield-Penfield brick machine is the basis of the trust.

The contract, it is understood, forces all brick manufacturers to contribute 25 cents a thousand on bricks handled by the machine.

Contract Sets Minimum Price.

The damaging section of the contract is a section which demands that all manufacturers using the machine make a certain charge for their material.

James Gullet and A. D. Rodenberg assistant attorney generals, will leave for New York today to consult Samuel Untermeyer, who conducted the legal work for the Lockwood commission which sent several New York building trades union leaders to Sing Sing. They will also confer with Attorney General Daugherty in Washington and will visit Albany to secure the records in the Lockwood commission's investigation.

Navy to Sell 300 Houses.

Three hundred barracks on the U. S. Naval station at Great Lakes are to be sold. Commander M. M. Frucht, executive officer, said. Many will be reserved for individual bidders, with the idea that it may help relieve the housing situation. The building are 27 feet wide and 100 feet long. They will be sold to the higest bidders on May 11. Plumbing will be given with the buildings.

Practically all the $18,000,000 of construction by the government in the west side camps is to be dismantled, Commander Frucht said, but the navy will keep title to the land.

188,000 Apartments, 308,000 Families.

There are 188,000 apartments housing 308,000 families in Chicago, as the result of the housing shortage, according to figures secured by the Illinois Bell Telephone company in a special survey.

The eviction suit of William Storz, owner of the property at 10062 Prospect avenue, was met with an application for an injunction in Superior court by Mrs. Alice E. Bailey. Storz charges Mrs. Bailey has violated the terms of her lease, which expires May 1922. She denies the charge and asks an injunction forbidding him to oust her.

AUTO TURNS OVER, CO-ED SAYS "BYE" AND CATCHES TRAIN

MISS MILDRED CULVER. [J. D. Toloff Photo.]

Miss Mildred Culver of Delta Gamma sorority at Northwestern university and Arthur Ellers of 2735 Logan boulevard, her escort, escaped injury yesterday when their auto turned upside down after colliding with a sedan driven by Dr. Mary G. McEwan of 1703 Chicago avenue, Evanston. Ellers, member of Phi Kappa Psi fraternity at Northwestern, was driving Miss Ellers to a train to her home in Aurora. At Orrington avenue and Church street, Evanston, they collided with Dr. McEwan's car, which completely upset the students' auto. Witnesses stated Eller's auto turned over twice.

Miss Culver crawled from the wreckage. Eller escaped with a few minor injuries and Mrs. McEwan was not hurt, nor were her professional services necessary. Miss Culver bade Ellers goodbye, and caught her train.

"Only providence saved Mildred from death," her mother said when the girl reached home.

Centralia, Ill., April 16.—[Special.]—The west wall of the old Kohl & Meyer building on Chestnut street collapsed early today. The building was erected in 1855, was vacated in 1918 and has since been used as a storehouse.

C.A.C. BACKS MOVE TO CUT WAGES IN BUILDING TRADES

Resumption of Work Vital to City.

Setting forth that material prices already have been reduced and that the only obstacle in the way of starting work on projects involving many millions of dollars and of vital interest to the entire city is a reduction in the cost of labor, the executive committee of the Association of Commerce yesterday adopted resolutions pledging support to contractors and employers in their efforts to bring wages down to a point where building operations can be undertaken.

The resolutions adopted in part are as follows:

"Whereas, The wage agreements in the building trades mainly expire on May 1, 1921; and

"Whereas, There is a widespread feeling on the part of the general public, as well as those more intimately concerned with the building industry, that labor costs in Chicago are too high; and

"Whereas, There is at present a deadlock in the building industry; and

"Whereas, The shortage of homes and all other types of buildings, the unemployment situation, the demands being made for control of rentals by municipal commissions, and the need of a general business revival, dictate the necessity of a large volume of building at this time; and

"Whereas, There have already been reductions in material costs and the general trend of all commodity prices is downward; and

"Whereas, The principal unions constituting the Building Trades council have rejected the suggestion of the contractors' organizations that they accept a wage after May 1 of $1 an hour for mechanics and 70 cents an hour for laborers; therefore be it

Material Cost Reduced.

"Resolved, That the president of the Chicago Association of Commerce be authorized to confer with the officials of the contractors' and employers' organizations and inform these organizations that the Chicago Association of Commerce believes it the duty of all concerned to stand solidly for reductions in both labor and material costs, and that the general public is looking to the contractors and employers for immediate relief in the present situation; and further, that the association believes the general public will stand firmly behind them in insisting that a scale of wages in the building industry not exceeding that proposed by the contractors be made effective as of May 1, 1921."

"Building Must Go Ahead."

"Building must go ahead if the present intolerable conditions relative to high rents and unemployment are to be corrected," President Joseph R. Noel said. "The only way this is possible is by a reduction in the cost of building. Producers of building material already have made considerable reductions. Labor should follow suit.

"Today thousands of workers are unemployed. If they would accept the scale proposed by the contractors there would be work for all."

U. S. STEEL EDICT ON THREE SHIFT WORKDAY WAITED

Report May Bring Jobs for Thousands.

BY ARTHUR M. EVANS.

THREE SHIFTS IN STEEL.

"A twelve hour day of labor, followed continuously by any group of men for any considerable number of years, means a decreasing of the efficiency and lessening of the vigor and virility of such men."—From the stockholders' committee report at the annual meeting of the U. S. Steel corporation, 1912, recommending the shorter workday.

Two men out of every three in the steel and iron industry are now idle or on part time, but the twelve and fourteen hour day, abolished in nearly every other great manufacturing country, is still on the job.

During the peak fairly close to 500,000 workers were employed in the blast furnaces, steel works, and rolling mills of the United States. Now the industry as a whole is running at less than 30 per cent. Approximately 150,000 workers are still employed, it would seem. Of these about one-half, or 75,000, are estimated to have the long working day. When employed they are toiling under the ancient two-shift system. Meanwhile 350,000 other workers in the industry are out of jobs.

A change to three shifts, even during the present doldrums, would put at least 37,000 more men back to work. When the mills get back to normal operations the three-shift system would give employment to perhaps 100,000 or 125,000 more men than does the twelve hour day—thus aiding in the stabilizing of employment in industry in general.

Uncertainty Veils Report.

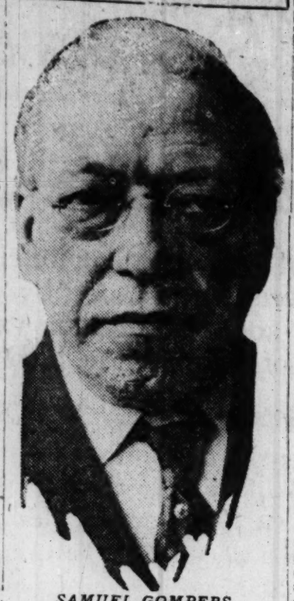
The figures indicate the great opportunity steel and iron now have to wipe out the black spot on American industry. They form a general background for the impending report of a special committee of the United States Steel corporation upon the advisability of installing three shifts in continuous processes in steel. The report is expected to be made before the end of this month. Nearly every day, as the time approaches, conflicting rumors come from New York and Pittsburgh as to whether the shorter working day will be recommended and established. The bulk of the inside opinion is that the finding will be favorable. Against this are rumors that the question of cost is advanced as an obstacle. So the uncertainty is great.

In conjunction with the question of wage reductions, however, it is pointed out that the wage deflation movement ought to help rather than retard the eight hour day. Ordinarily when a plant goes from the two shift system to three shifts, an increase is made in wage rates, so that weekly earnings of the men are not chopped too much.

Jump in Production Seen.

Instead of reducing wages, it is argued, the steel corporation might reduce hours. There would be a saving through getting rid of overtime rates, and the increase in pay roll, so engineers figure, would be largely offset by increased per man production—individual output jumps at least 10 per cent under the shorter day; such has been experience. And under favorable conditions it goes considerably higher.

MARRIED AGAIN



SAMUEL GOMPERS,

GOMPERS WEDS GOTHAM ARTIST MET AT LECTURE

New York, April 16.—[Special.]—Samuel Gompers, founder and president of the American Federation of Labor, and Mrs. Gertrude Ainslee Gleaves Neuschler, a pianist and artist of this city, were married at 11 o'clock today in the Hotel Willard. The 71 year old labor veteran and his bride, who is 38, left the city at 12:35 o'clock for Toronto, where Mr. Gompers will lecture.

The wedding ceremony was performed by Supreme Court Justice Robert F. Wagner in the presence of two sisters of the bride and a small group of labor leaders and friends of Mr. Gompers. None of Mr. Gompers' children or kinsfolk attended.

Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, was Mr. Gompers' best man, while Miss Elsie Gleaves of Trenton, N. J., sister of the bride, acted as maid of honor. Mrs. Morrison was matron of honor.

DEERE PLOWS' PRICES CUT 10%

Moline, Ill., April 16.—Following reductions in the price of steel made by the United States Steel corporation, Deere & Co. today anounced a reduction of 10 per cent in the prices of plows, cultivators, spreaders, disk harrows, corn planters, hay loaders, grain and corn binders, mowers, sulky rakes, and other implements. The company statement declared that the cut in steel prices would not save it anything on its 1921 output, but it was absorbing that loss.

Steel Tubing Reduced.

New York, April 16.—Reductions ranging from $4 to $12 a ton on prices of steel pipe were announced here today by the United States Steel corporation through its subsidiary, the National Tube company.

PRIESTS' HOUSE AND OTHERS ARE BURNED IN ERIN

Reprisal for Slaying of Maj. MacKinnon.

CORK, April 16.—[By the Associated Press.]—A dozen houses were burned today in Ballymacelligott, County Kerry, including a presbytery in which priests resided, following the shooting to death of Maj. Mackinnon, commander of a company of black and tans, on the Tralee golf course Friday afternoon. There have been no reprisals in Tralee, where the military took charge of the town. All the shops have been closed and business suspended.

In Ballydwyer a creamery which previously had been burned and reconstructed, was again burned. A young civilian, fleeing on the approach of military lorries, was shot dead.

ERIN'S FINANCES LOW

BY JOHN LESTER.
[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

DUBLIN, April 16.—The Freeman's Journal here today gives figures showing that both Irish parliaments will be bankrupt from their beginning owing to financial terms in the home rule act. The paper estimates that there will be a deficit of £10,000,000 (normally about $50,000,000) instead of a surplus of £7,000,000 ($35,000,000) which had been estimated by the officials. It is declared this condition is due to the withdrawal of the excess profits tax and the increased cost of police, teachers, and civil servants. It is declared the northern parliament will be worse off than the southern.

Irish Attack Airdrome.

Irish "Republican" attacked the airdrome at Fermoy early today in an attempt to destroy the wireless apparatus there, but were driven off.

Absence of news from Tralee is causing anxiety, as reprisals are feared because of the murder of Major Mackinnon, who commanded the auxiliaries there, while he was playing golf near the town. Hundreds of people left Tralee last night.

PROHIBITS CLAIMS CASES.

DUBLIN, April 16.—[By the Associated Press.]—Gen. Sir Nevil Macready, military commander of Ireland, issued a proclamation today declaring without jurisdiction all courts of justice in the martial law areas in claims for damage or injury alleged to have been caused by crown forces, unless the proceedings are sanctioned by the military governor.

This proclamation originated from the protests of Judge Bodkin, presiding over the quarter sessions in Ennis, County Clare, and Judge Cusack of the Tralee quarter sessions, who Friday declared they had been directed by the chief commanders of the crown forces to prohibit courts hearing cases in which allegations were made against either the military or police forces of the crown. Judge Cusack protested that the order meant suspending the civil courts in the martial law areas.

P. J. Kelly, correspondent here of the New York World, was wounded in an ambush at the O'Connell bridge in the heart of the business district of Dublin late today.

Kelly, with two other newspaper correspondents, had just crossed the bridge when an automobile dashed by the trio, and they stepped back to avoid it. The automobile is supposed to have contained members of the crown forces, as it was immediately attacked with a bomb. The other correspondents dropped to the ground and escaped injury, but Kelly received a bomb splinter in the face which tore his cheek. He will be operated on Monday for removal of the splinter.

QUAKERS APPEAL FOR U. S. AID TO SUFFERING ERIN

Report 100,000 Peaceful Citizens in Need.

New York, April 16.—The American committee for relief in Ireland tonight made public a report of an investigation of conditions in Ireland by a unit of the Society of Friends, in which the Quakers asserted that material damage "inflicted by the British forces within the last twelve months amounts to approximately $20,000,000."

The unit, which was sent to Ireland in February, reported that there were "25,000 families in Ireland, numbering approximately 100,000 persons, in pitiful need of instant help."

These 100,000 people, said the report, signed by Samuel D. McCoy, were composed "entirely of men and women who have quietly gone about their peaceful pursuits and have steadfastly refrained from taking part in armed activities."

Confident U. S. Will Help.

The report, the result of investigation in nearly one hundred communities scattered throughout twenty-two of the thirty-two counties, was made public, the committee said, in confidence that the American people "with their traditional generosity, will help to alleviate."

The unit's figures of $20,000,000 material damage in Ireland, the report said, "coincides substantially with the total figures collected by Irish republican statisticians, and, it should be noted, are less by $8,000,000 than the estimate given us by a responsible crown official who is informed in regard to the data in the possession of the crown.

Not a Part of Warfare.

"The distress which we ourselves witnessed is, we here emphasize, a distress quite separate and distinct from that which arises from unemployment due to general trade depression; it is separate and distinct from the distress arising from long continued poverty, such as may be observed in the slums of New York or Chicago or London; it is wholly separate and distinct from the economic distress of Irish women and children whose male relatives may be engaged in armed opposition to the British military forces."

The report estimated that to repair the $20,000,000 damage to "Irish shop buildings, factories, creameries and private dwelling houses" would cost $25,000,000 unless the cost of labor and materials was greatly reduced. The number of buildings damaged or partially or wholly destroyed, the report estimated, was upwards of 600.

Regarding labor conditions in the regions investigated, the report said:

"We may point out that even when employed, the workman in Ireland receives a wage so low that it would be difficult for an American to understand how the Irish workman can support himself and his family. The present prevailing wage for ordinary unskilled labor ranges from $9 to $14 a week; workers at electric power houses, for example, receive only $14; motormen, $12.50; conductors, $11.50; farm laborers rarely more than $8.

"Today the 25,000 families to which we refer have not even this scanty income."

Crippling of Creameries.

"From the crippling of the coöperative creameries," the report continues, "15,000 farmers who supplied these creameries with milk for butter and cheese making suffer severe loss and face even more deeply serious distress in the immediate future. During the last year more than fifty attacks by crown forces were made on coöperative creameries. The amount necessary to restore these creameries is £114,279, but in arriving at this figure the investigators adopted drastically reduced estimates."

BANK OF KINDNESS

Draw a Check on It for the Unfortunate.

BY REV. G. A. MAC WHORTER.

Tomorrow a campaign will be inaugurated in the Hyde Park and Kenwood districts for dollar memberships in the Illinois Society for the Prevention of Blindness, and in the weeks to follow similar drives will be held on the north and west sides. The appeal is chiefly in the interest of saving the eyesight of infants and children, for 50 per cent of the cases of blindness in children are preventable if treatment is afforded in time.

The late Bryan Lathrop founded the Society for the Prevention of Blindness in 1915 and Charles L. Hutchinson is now its president. Mrs. John O'Connor, 5543 Hyde Park boulevard, is the general chairman of the present drive, but $1 checks for membership should be made out to Watson Blair, treasurer. One dollar is a small amount to invest, but when that investment insures bright, sparkling eyes to a little child there is no better way to invest your money.

Churches, clubs, and residents in hotels are organizing committees to coperate in the drive opening tomorrow. Miss Marion A. Campbell is secretary of the society, with offices at 122 South Michigan avenue.

LINDSEY MAY NOT BE JAILED FOR CONTEMPT

Denver, Colo., April 16.—Attorneys for Judge Ben B. Lindsey of the Juvenile court today were granted three days in which to file a motion asking suspension of the contempt of court sentence imposed on Judge Lindsey in 1915.

The final disposition of the case is expected next Saturday. District Attorney Philip Van Cise expressed the belief that the court could not send Judge Lindsey to jail even if the juvenile judge did not pay his $500 fine.

PARIS STARTS TO CLEAN STAGE OF NUDE WOMEN

Police Raid Lewd Exhibits Under New Purity Law.

BY HENRY WALES.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

(Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.)

PARIS, April 16.—The government actively has started to remove nude women from the stages of Paris and to wipe out that epidemic of pornography and public immorality which in the eyes of tourists has begun to overshadow the lofty culture of France.

The prefect of police has notified the theater owners of the capital that their theaters will be closed if they continue to display unclad actresses to their audiences, permit lascivious scenes to be enacted, or allow obscene lines. The prefect receives his orders from the minister of the interior.

New Law Gives Power.

The cabinet has demanded forcible action to carry out the campaign against the hawking of moral filth. Its hands just have been strengthened by an amendment to the law of 1882 extending the powers of the state over the regulation of the public morals. The amendment was signed the other day by President Millerand.

The traveler in Paris will not see now the lewd extravaganzas that he was able to see a month ago. The actresses previously wholly unclad in the Casino de Paris, the Folies Bergere, and the Concert Mayol, the leading centers of these displays, now virtually have vanished. There still is an almost nude woman as Venus at the Casino, but she no longer prances about, remaining motionless throughout the scene. At the Folies the women in the most daring scene have been loaded with strings of beads, while lace scarfs have been wound around the previously nude nymphs. At the Mayol the harem scene, which has run for many months, has been distinctly toned down.

Complaint of Tourists.

Action by the government has come as the result of strong protest by American and English tourists who have been shocked at the nudity presented on the stages of the various music halls and revues of Paris and by French theatergoers who object to the vulgar and suggestive lines of actors and actresses.

Controlling the theaters is another step in the process of purifying Paris which was begun just before the war, when Berlin was gaining a questionable reputation through capitalization of its "night life" in the belief that thousands of tourists might be drawn there because of the rampant vice.

Rivalry for Lewdness.

The recent epidemic of undraped actresses on the Paris stage is a reflex from the restrictions of the war, and the rivalry of two theatrical managers, each endeavoring to outdo the other in daring stunts and lavish productions.

Raphael Beretta, manager of the Folies Bergere, and Leon Volterra of the Casino de Paris are seeking supremacy in the music hall and revue field of Paris. At the beginning of the war Volterra was a program vender in the Olympia vaudeville theater and his climb in rank has been swift and sure.

During the war, when restaurants and cafés closed at 9:30 p. m., and when transportation was difficult because of the early hours when the underground busses and street cars stopped running and when taxicabs were scarce, no serious effort was made in the theatrical world.

Theaters suffered lack of personnel through their employés being mobilized at the front, and it was difficult to obtain scenery and costumes.

Barred Nudity Reappears.

With the armistice, however, Volterra's ambitions had free rein, and he opened a sumptuous revue at the Casino de Paris with Gaby Deslys and Harry Pilcer featured. In this revue he introduced the first nude female seen on the stage since 1913, when nudity was barred by the prefect of police.

Out of a piano came in turn actresses dressed—or undressed—to represent various operas. Spectators held their breath when the orchestra broke into the strains of a selection from Aphrodite, and their anticipations were rewarded when La Belle Dherlys, clad only in a string of pearls, emerged from the piano.

In the next revue, instead of having a statuesque beauty pose unclad as a living picture, the management had her dance with Harry Pilcer.

French Comstock Aroused.

Senator de Lamarzelle, the "French Anthony Comstock," attacked the presentation of nude women on the stage and insisted that M. Bonnevay, minister of the interior, take steps to prevent such spectacles. The senator asserted that Americans and Englishmen would not permit their wives and daughters to visit a city where such scenes were permitted and demanded that the fair name of Paris be preserved.

Gen. Cowans entered the army in 1881, winning a brigadier generalship in 1908, a lieutenant generalship in 1915, and attaining the rank of general in 1919.

He was quartermaster general of the war forces from 1912 to 1919. He was 58 years old.

GREAT MYSTERY OF FLEEING FEZ GRIPS MIDWAY

Egyptology, Cops, and Oriental Mix.

A new mystery play was enacted on the Midway yesterday. "My Turkish Trophy" was played at a single matinee before a big crowd of students, none of whom was able to solve the puzzle.

The characters include Mrs. James H. Breasted, wife of Prof. Breasted, professor of Egyptology, Policeman Houlihan of the Hyde Park station, members of the Delta Tau Delta and Phi Kappa Psi fraternities, and the "Turkish Trophy," a mysterious male with gleaming eyes of the Orient, who supplied most of the mystery.

A Blue Taxi and a Chase.

The play started in mid-afternoon, when the big blue taxicab from the Hyde Park station pulled up in front of the home of Prof. Breasted at 5615 University avenue. Houlihan and his cohorts surrounded the home, while members of the two fraternities in the block gave up their Saturday afternoon games of bridge to join the posse.

Suddenly from the Breasted home dashed the "Turkish Trophy," attired in his red fez and other typical attire. The coppers joined the sprinters from the fraternities and gave chase. Two blocks away he was overtaken and surrounded.

Savant's Wife Silent.

Mrs. Breasted refused to answer any questions and grew hysterical when interviewed by newspapermen. Officer Houlihan, at the request of Mrs. Breasted, refused to comment on the chase of the "Turkish Trophy." Neighbors say that the oriental is a protégé of Prof. Breasted, imported from the orient to assist the world famous Egyptologist in deciphering new hieroglyphics just arrived from the far east.

The mystery squad of the campus is working on the case and expects to identify the mysterious "Turkish Trophy." Prof. Breasted is in Philadelphia giving a lecture course.

SLAM BALL PARK GATES ON INDICTED SOX

PENN WINS OVER YALE'S OARSMEN IN VARSITY RACE

New Haven Junior Rowers Take Other Event.

Derby, Conn., April 16.—Pennsylvania defeated Yale in the varsity crew race on the Housatonic river late today by a full length. In the race of the junior eights, Yale won in a hard fought contest by a half length. A crowd estimated at more than 20,000 persons saw the races. From the spectators' viewpoint the junior race was the more exciting.

GUY NICKALLS.
[Yale Coach.]

After a delay at the start, owing to the swerving of the shells in the current, Yale took the water first in the varsity race. The blue held the lead and at the three-quarter mile mark was a length ahead. Pennsylvania spurted and overtook the Yale and as the shells passed the mile mark the Quakers pulled into the lead. The Nickalls combination was unable to overcome this advantage and Wright's oarsmen increased their lead as they swung toward the finish line. Clear water showed between the shells as they crossed the line. The time was: Pennsylvania, 7:05; Yale, 7:09.

Yale Man Collapses.

A south wind slowed up the crews. Kaldeman, No. 3 in the Yale boat, collapsed after the finish. All the Pennsylvania oarsmen finished strong.

The record for the Henley distance of 1 5-16 miles on this course is 6:20 2-5, made by Pennsylvania in 1919.

Yale got the jump in the junior race, but Pennsylvania pulled up strong and had a lead at the half mile mark. The Quakers held an advantage of a quarter length until the mile, where Yale spurted and got on even terms. Approaching the finish line the blue shell crept ahead and crossed the line a half length in front of Pennsylvania. The time: Yale, 7:17⅕; Pennsylvania, 7:22.

Coach Jim Rice Interested.

An observation train of twelve coaches followed the crews along the Shelton side of the river. Among those who watched the races from the train was Jim Rice, coach of the Columbia crews, which will row Yale here in two weeks.

SCRIVANS WINS TEN MILE ROLLER SKATING EVENT

Putting on a burst of speed in the final lap, William Scrivans of the Opal A. A. last night won the ten mile amateur roller skate race at the Riverview rink. The race was the final of a series given under the auspices of the Opal A. A. for the world's championship. Victor Frasch won the title by amassing 43 points, winning three races. Scrivans was second in the point total with 30 points.

Emmett Bidler of Smith's rink of Columbus, O., won the special lap prize for leading the greatest number of laps in the ten mile event. Bidler had a long lead, but fell three laps from the finish, and Scrivans passed him. Scrivans' time for the ten mile was 26:11 3-5.

JUNIOR SHOOTERS IN RIFLE EVENT

New York, April 16.—[Special.]—Illinois, Iowa, Michigan and other mid-western states are represented in the Winchester Junior Rifle Corps medal competition winners during March. The highest award is the Expert medal. The following fourteen boys achieved this honor in March:

W. Christopher, San Pedro, Cal.; Arthur Alexander, Joliet, Ill.; Leonard Gilbert, Waukegan, Ill.; Addison Brandon, Council Bluffs, Ia.; F. W. Andrews, Arlington, Mass.; C. A. Collins, Detroit, Mich.; Allen Edwards, Webb Groves, Mo.; Joseph Simpson, Grand Island, Neb.; B. F. Dutton, Bordentown, N. J.; E. M. Ries, Brooklyn; Harold Smith, Richmond, N. Y.; Sidney Winkel, Larchmont, N. Y.; Kenneth Gardener, Juniata, Pa.

According to the official figures just announced 1,976 boys and girls won medals for accurate shooting.

Call Montreal's Decision Over Herman Robbery

Boston, Mass., April 16.—[Special.] Boston sporting writers today almost without exception panned last night's decision against Pete Herman of New Orleans in his bout with Young Montreal of Providence at the Boston arena. The bout was fought under the auspices of the Armory A. A. They call the verdict against Herman robbery and want the state boxing commission to investigate the affair for the good of boxing in this state.

Tex Denies He Has Closed Lease for Site of Big Go

New York, April 16.—Tex Rickard today denied he had closed a lease for a tract of ground in Jersey City upon which to erect the arena for the Dempsey-Carpentier fight. He did not deny that Jersey City had been selected, saying that he probably would make the announcement the first of next week.

Northwestern Vs. Purdue Off Because of Weather

Lafayette, Ind., April 16.—The baseball game between Northwestern and Purdue went into the discard today because of the cold weather.

In the Wake of the News

TURF PARLANCE IN OUR SLANG.

Current slang, much of which has lost the quotation marks by common usage, has derived more expressions from racing than from any other sport, not excluding baseball. The conversation of an oldtime rubber or trainer, interspersed with similes drawn from the only subject he knows, is almost unintelligible to one not familiar with the turf.

Many of our Helpers, no doubt, can add materially to the appended list of common expressions:

They're Off—The cry which arises at the track when the field is sent away on its journey by the starter.

Field—Starters in a race.

Beat the barrier—The horses are supposed to start on even terms, but occasionally one will be in stride while another is almost flatfooted.

Setting the pace—Going out in front.

Under wraps—Restrained in early part of race to save energy for the finish.

Come from behind—Some horses do not like to run in front, but finish with a rush.

Garrison finish—"Snapper" Garrison was a noted jockey who brought many apparently beaten horses under the wire winners.

Wins by a nose—In describing a race it is customary to say that the winner won by a nose, head, neck, length, or several lengths.

Favorite—Horse upon which there is the most betting.

Runs for Sweeney—Horse supposed to be "dead" or not trying, or more commonly, to have no chance.

Feedbox dope—Inside information coming from an owner or stable help.

Beating the odds—Bookmakers post various odds, and they frequently change with the volume of play. An alert betting commissioner tries to secure the best odds.

Dutch book—Sometimes a bookmaker finds he has laid odds which will make him loser no matter which horse wins the race.

Selling plater—Of inferior quality; derived from selling race as contrasted with stake or handicap.

Morning glory—Horse which runs well in morning workout, but performs indifferently in actual race.

A Gentleman.

Granddad was a courtly gentleman
Of the good old-fashioned school,
Who laughed away each care in life
And observed the golden rule.

He used to drive a four-in-hand
In state on Derby day;
A prize fight he delighted in,
Mint Julips made him gay.
In those days (would you believe it?)
Men drank liquor, gambled too,
Though now, in chaste Chicago,
Such things are all taboo.

If Granddaddy could return today,
I'm sure that he would sing,
O, Grave, where is thy victory?
O, Death, where is thy sting!
Babette.

All-Chicago Prep Baseball.

Chicago's high school baseball schedule has been drawn with a view to determining champions to whom will fall the honor of retrieving our prestige in a return game against the best team of Greater New York.

In the first contest, inaugurated and sponsored by THE TRIBUNE last spring, New York's school of commerce defeated our Lane boys.

Now we want a keen contest to pick a well developed team to go east, and we want every team in the league and every coach in the league, as soon as this champion is determined or forecast, to lend every assistance toward a Chicago victory by pointing out weaknesses or giving helpful hints to the crusaders.

This team will represent Chicago rather than any one high school.

HE'S OFF AGAIN! RUTH GETS NO. 1 AS YANKEES WIN

Meusel Also Poles Homer as Macks Fall, 3-1.

New York, April 16.—[Special.]—The famous Babe Ruth got loose today, cracking his first homer of the season. With the count two and three in the sixth inning, Babe leaned on a wide one and smacked it into the upper tier of the stands. The bases were empty at the time and the Yankees already had the game with the Athletics on the ice. The final score, 3 to 1.

Another Yank got a home run today—Meusel, the right fielder—who caught one of Harris' shoots flush on the nose and lifted it twenty feet over the left field fence for one of the longest home runs ever made on the Polo grounds. Meusel's smash came in the second inning.

Crowd of 25,000 at Game.

Today's game, the final of the series with the Athletics, was a good one from the 25,000 fans' idea.

Bill Piercy made his debut as a Yankee twirler and let the Athletics down with four hits. He was a little wild and sent two Athletics to first in collisions with his curves.

Harris for the Athletics twirled a good game and allowed only four hits, but those two circuit clouts were the blows that hurt. Harris and Piercy each struck out six.

Earlier Start This Year.

In starting his effort to surpass the world's record he made last year Ruth already is two weeks ahead of his 1920 record, when his first circuit clout came May 1. Score:

St. Louis, Mo., April 16.—St. Louis broke even in the series with Cleveland by winning today, 7 to 6. HOW BABE RUTH CLOUTS THE PILL FOR HOME RUNS

THE above series of photographs show "Babe" in the act of knocking out one of his famous hits. The photograph at the left shows him as he steps to the plate and eyes the pitcher. Then, in successive stages, he is shown with the bat at his shoulder, the beginning of his tremendous swing, and how he holds the bat in various stages of his smash at the ball. The photograph at the right shows the end of his swing after he has connected with the sphere and just before he starts for first base.

CUBS-CARDS COMBAT BLOWN INTO DISCARD BY SIXTY MILE GALE

LOOKS BAD TODAY!

CONTINUED cold Sunday, with snow in morning, followed by fair in afternoon and diminishing northerly winds; Monday fair with rising temperature.

BY I. E. SANBORN.

Even Jawn Evers, fiery manager of the Cubs, would not risk playing baseball yesterday rith a sixty mile gale whistling through the grand stand, whipping in its wake the tail of a Colorado maduro blizzard. Consequently the final game of the series with the Cardinal crew went into the temporary discard.

Only two of the four contests with St. Louis were staged, but the Cub manager was glad to get in those two under the conditions and doubly glad to win both of them, giving his team a berth on top until the weather abates at least.

The postponed game of Thursday will be booked for July 1, an open date for both Cubs and Cardinals. Yesterday's game will be staged as the second spasm of a double header on May 28, next time the Cards are in town.

Weather permitting, the Bruins will tackle the Pirates today in the first of a three game series, which will wind up the initial home series for the north siders. Next Wednesday will be an off day for Evers' men and they will leave that night for their first short trip, beginning with four games in St. Louis next Thursday, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday.

Following that the Cubs will jump to Cincinnati for three games on April 25, 26, and 27.

An open date on April 28 has been filled in with an exhibition game at Columbus against Clarence Rowland's Senators. The Cubs will then be on their way to play two games in Pittsburgh on the closing days of the month, returning to Chicago May 1 for a couple of battles here with the Pirates.

SOX-TIGERS GAME OFF

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

Detroit, Mich., April 16.—[Special.]—Weather that would have been more appropriate last month than now wiped out all chances of the White Sox and Tigers playing the final and rubber game of their set today. It rained all night and all day, and still was coming down strong when Gleason and his athletes stepped aboard a 6 o'clock train bound for St. Louis.

Aside from the loss of a huge Saturday gate and disappointment to the colony of local bugs, the postponement was a matter of keen regret to Manager Gleason, who is beginning to believe that if his athletes do not strike some good weather soon he will have to start another training trip.

The schedule gives the Chicagoans a fairly good break. Going into St. Louis at this season of the year almost assures one some passable weather. Unless the exception prevail, the Sox should get a lot of benefit out of their visit there.

The Inquiring Reporter

Every Day He Asks Five Persons, Picked at Random, a Question.

The Question.

How did the Cubs look to you in the opening game?

Where Asked.

Cub park, after game.

The Answers.

Mrs. Edward M. Gertz, 4451 North Robey street, housewife—They look like a clean lot of fellows. From their looks I think they are going to play some real baseball. They seem to have lots of snap and pep and I think they will accomplish great things.

H. F. Burgoyne, Maywood, Ill., Salesman—Fine! Much better than last year, in my opinion. They play a much steadier game. As a fan, I am greatly pleased with the opening game and expect to see more real baseball.

June Twesine, 3131 West Augusta street, student—I think they are fine. They played a great game. If you can draw conclusions from the opening game, and I think you can, I believe they will play fine baseball all summer. At least I think they will "come through."

Charles Campbell, River Forest, salesman — Great! Mighty fine game. They are a fine bunch of players. They started out in a big stride and I hope they don't slacken up. That guy O'Farrell certainly can slam the ball. He's a real slugger.

Russell Horrell, 4611 Broadway, a waiter — Wonderful! Much better than last year. There seems to be better team work. They seem to pull together better than the old team. And teamwork's the thing, I believe. I expect them to carry everything before them.

EDWIN MARTIN BEATS C. A. GAGE IN AMATEUR 18-2 CUE TITLE EVENT

Champaign, Ill., April 16.—[Special.]—Playing a close, consistent game, Edwin Martin of Chicago defeated C. A. Gage of Champaign in the final round for championship honors in the 18-2 amateur balk line tournament held by the Illinois State Billiard association here this afternoon, 250 to 180.

The contest seesawed back and forth, only a few points separating the contenders until the twenty-eighth inning, when Martin stepped out and gathered a neat run of 29. Martin was never in danger after this, and finished his block of 250 in the forty-sixth inning.

Martin's execution was excellent, his draw and follow shots exceptionally well played. Gage, the dethroned champion, apparently had an off day, coupled with a few bad breaks.

At the close of the contest Martin was presented with the diamond medal given by the association. Tom Clark of Peoria, referee, made the presentation. T. B. Wadleigh, secretary of the association, gave a short talk emphasizing the clean sportsmanship which was displayed throughout the games held this season. The new champion is an architect by profession.

The score at each tenth inning:

Martin	26	98	170	228	250	46 innings
Gage	28	82	139	174	180	46 innings

High run—Martin, 29; Gage, 20.

LANDIS AWARDS CANADA LEAGUE PITCHER TO SOX

CALGARY, Alta., April 16.—Milton Steengraafe, star pitcher of last year's Calgary club of the Western Canada league, has been awarded to the Chicago White Sox, according to a telegram from Judge K. M. Landis received here by President Birch of the local club. The ruling probably will be appealed, it was stated, as Steengraafe when under 18 years of age signed to play for the White Sox, while his mother signed the Calgary contract.

LOCAL SEMI-PROS REFUSE TO MEET BARRED PLAYERS

National Amateur League Also Closes Door.

Indicted castoffs of the White Sox, who had been booked to play against local semi-pro opposition this afternoon, were informed yesterday that they were barred not only from playing on the field which had been secured, but that umpires, semi-professional players, baseball ground lessees and prairie club managers would have nothing to do with them.

JOE JACKSON.
[TRIBUNE Photo.]

Next week the entire matter of the Major Stars—better recognized by Chicago baseball fandom as the "Black Sox"—will come to a head with official action to bar the scorned players from all of the three big local semi-pro circuits—Chicago league, Midwest, and Intercity.

One Jolt After Another.

Since the announcement ten days ago, that the ex-Sox had banded with a few other players, under the business management of George K. Miller, said to be a Chicago broker, for the purpose of playing against semi-professional teams of Chicago, northern Indiana, southern Wisconsin, and adjacent localities, the brief history of the venture has been a succession of jolts.

First, the National Baseball federation, which is the governing body of the sand lot teams, issued a general order from Cleveland barring affiliated teams and players from competing with any club containing one or more of the outcasts from the 1919 world's series.

Where They're Barred.

In quick succession similar action followed by the Janesville, Wis., Tractor Citys, Decatur, Ill., Staleys, Lawrenceville, Ill., Havolines, and the Kenosha, Wis., Simmons, all teams of considerable prominence in the industrial athletic field.

Subsequently, general action was announced by President George E. Chamberlain of the Central Industrial Baseball league, which includes most of the clubs named, that no team in the circuit would consider an offer to play the Major Stars, nor would any team accept the services of any of the indicted players.

Action taken yesterday which put a quietus on all advance arrangements for this afternoon's game, scheduled between the outlaw travelers and the Aristo Giants, at Murley park, included the announcement that the Umpires' Protective association, which qualifies the officials for the summer sport in the local semi-pro field, would expel any umpire working in a game in which the "Black Sox" figured.

Logansport Bars 'Em.

At the same time the telegraph wires brought news from Logansport, Ind., that S. O. Burman, owner of a park in that city, had rejected the plea of Assistant Field Manager Bill Zeman of the Major Stars, to plant the team in the Hoosier city for the season. Claude Williams, Chick Gandil, Buck Weaver, Joe Jackson and Happy Felsch were to be in the lineup, according to guarantees advanced to the Logansport park owner.

It is understood that Fred McMullin and Charles Risberg are included in the Major Stars outfit, which would leave only Eddie Cicotte, of the indicted octet, absent from the team which has been making efforts for more than a week to book a game. Besides these seven players, Joe Gedeon, late of St. Louis Browns, but now suspended for alleged gambling activities, is said to be a member of the team.

Jackson Sees Success.

Joe Jackson, who was in Chicago last week, was asked about his part in the venture. "I think it will go over big when we get the chance to break in and show what we can do on the diamond," he said. "Personally, I could play all the baseball I wanted down south, but I'd prefer to play up here. If our bunch gets together for this team like it's lining up we certainly can play the ball, and that's what the crowds want to see. I don't think there would be any trouble."

This opinion was echoed by Swede Risberg and by Miller, the backer of the venture, who stated that he was waiting telegrams to reach him at the "Black Sox" headquarters, 820 Harris Trust building, in answer to a flood of wires he has sent over the middle west offering to match his team against any local professional or semipro aggregation which will agree to play.

Others Maintain Silence.

While Jackson and Risberg were uttering their optimistic sentiments, others of the team either did not appear, or maintained silence.

While individual members of the Aristo Giants expressed satisfaction that the untimely weather, and other developments of yesterday relieved them from necessity of a showdown on playing the game booked for today at Murley park, an anonymous telephone informant, who said he was interested in such a game, called up THE TRIBUNE sporting department last night to say that the Aristo-"Black Sox" game had been rescheduled for next Sunday, and that plans already were under way to secure a local park, despite the opposition.

BUCKEYES TO BE BIG TEN FACTOR; LOSE TO ILLINOIS

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

Columbus, O., April 16.—[Special.]—Although Ohio State lost its first conference baseball game to Illinois at Neill park today, 3 to 2, the Buckeyes will be a worthy opponent for other "Big Ten" teams before the season draws to a close in June.

I. M. HUFFMAN. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

The team which is practically a veteran one, has been handicapped this spring by the weather. It has rained continuously and Coach L. W. St. John has not had the opportunities to get his pitchers in shape or give the men much needed batting practice. Despite this handicap, the men as a whole played good baseball and made few mistakes.

Rally, but Fall Short.

The baseball team has the same fight and determination as last year's football eleven, which pulled three games out of the fire. With the score 5 to 0 against them in the fifth inning, the Buckeyes rallied and scored two counters in their half of the session. In the remaining innings they threatened.

Athletic Director St. John is in charge of the development of the team. He has acted in this capacity ever since he joined the institution staff back in 1912. He knows a lot of baseball. He used rare judgment in switching pitchers and he also used good headwork in sending players to bat whenever the Illinois pitchers showed signs of weakening.

At the beginning of the fifth St John sent "Shorty" Long, a diminutive utility infielder, to bat in place of Griffith, the pitcher. Long worked Jackson for a base on balls which started the Ohio rally. He scored a moment later when Hellstrom, Illinois' second baseman, threw the ball into left field.

Ohio Pitchers Lack Control.

Ohio's pitchers need more work. William Griffith, a tall, rangy player with speed and stuff, lacked control. He hit two batsmen and walked three others and some of the passes resulted in runs.

Ohio made some mistakes which undoubtedly will be rectified before the next game. Once Pitcher Shaw was slow to cover first base on a bunt down the first base line and Dougherty was credited with a hit. On another occasion Harry Bliss, shortstop, overran second base on a sacrifice and was called out before he could return to the bag. In the second inning Huffman bunted on the third strike and got away with it after he fouled two attempts.

Fail to Start Quickly.

The Buckeyes' outfield, especially Henderson, can be justly criticised for not starting fast enough on hit balls. One fly ball fell safely in short right, while Illinois players would have made extra bases on hits had the base lines been dry. After the game St. John admitted his team was at fault, but asserted it will be 50 per cent better when the next game is played.

Ray Fenner, second baseman, is captain of this year's team and handles himself like a ball player. He fields the ball in clever fashion and hits well. Slyker at first base is an ideal player. He is tall and rangy and knows all the fine points of the position.

Bliss Has Good Arm.

Harry Bliss of football fame is playing a steady game at short and hit well in today's game. He has a good arm and is not inclined to fight hard hit balls by running in on them. Johnny Fick at third is a promising player who will be a valuable player with more experience.

Pat McNulty in left, Ray Fessler in center, and Herbert Henderson hit fairly well and will receive plenty of practice in their weakness before another "Big Ten" game is played.

Jolas Huffman, captain of last year's football team, is an ideal catcher. With his 185 pounds of weight he holds up the pitchers in perfect fashion and is in the game at all times. Sam Deutsch is the substitute receiver.

William Griffith and Robert Shaw looked good on the slab, with the exception of their wildness. Both have speed and fast breaking curves, which will be hard to hit as soon as they can be controlled. Wilbur Fish, one of the best of the pitching staff, has a sore arm, but will be ready for duty in a couple of weeks. Willard Cotter, Louis Dudly, and Walter Miller are other pitchers. Score:

BALL FEDERATION TO ASK TAX CUT

Cleveland, O., April 16.—The executive committee of the National Baseball federation in annual session today adopted a resolution urging congress to remove the 10 per cent war tax on athletic and recreational supplies and equipment used by amateurs. It is claimed the tax prevents many amateur athletes from enjoying recreational activities.

The secretary was instructed to communicate with the A. A. U. golf, tennis, and other associations fostering amateur sports to join with the federation in its efforts to have President Harding appoint a commissioner to his proposed welfare department who will give his assistance to amateur sports.

New York City became a member of the federation today. This takes in 150 amateur and 35 semi-professional teams of Gotham. Dr. P. M. Seixas of New York was appointed eastern representative of the federation.

Pinehurst, N. C., April 16.—Mrs. Molla Bjurstedt Mallory, national turf and indoor champion, added the north and south championships to her titles today, defeating Miss Marion Zinderstein, national clay court champion, and north and south champion until today, 7—5, 6—1, in the final match.

MRS. F. I. MALLORY [TRIBUNE Photo.]

Miss Zinderstein started with a rush, allowing her opponent only one point on an out in the first game. The former champion had the score 5—3 her way when she lost two points on Mrs. Mallory's lucky net shots in the ninth game, which appeared to unsettle her play.

The next game made it deuce and Mrs. Mallory took the next two and the set and had things all her own way in the second set.

Ichya Kiumgae, who is scheduled to represent Japan in the Davis cup matches, won the north and south title at Pinehurst in his final match with Wallace T. Johnson of Philadelphia. The scores were 3—6, 6—4, 6—3, 6—1.

DRIVE BY TIGERS DEFEATS TUFTS IN TENTH, 5 TO 4

BY JAMES CRUSINBERRY.

Princeton, N. J., April 16.—[Special.]—As in past years, Princeton again is a power in eastern college baseball. Although the Tigers have lost some of the stars that made them about the best of all a year ago, they have filled in with capable men from an enormous squad of seventy candidates, and today Old Bill Clark, who does the coaching, put a team on the field that will class with some of the best and be a lot better when it meets the big rival teams in a few weeks.

The Princeton boys were in a tough contest with the strong and muscular Tufts aggregation and it required ten innings to win, 5 to 4. It also required the good end of a couple of close decisions by a couple of umpires who acted as if they feared for their jobs should they call the close ones against the big school.

Play Consistent Ball.

That occurred early in the game and enabled the Tigers to tie the count after Tufts had popped away ahead, and from then on Princeton played in something like its last year's championship stride. There was little of the brilliance of the team of 1920 because Trimble and one or two other stars were not there. But there was the same consistency and class to the work of the men. They play ball as if they knew it, and if Tufts had done the same thing, the Tigers wouldn't have won.

Old Bill Clark must be a good teacher. His work shows in every action of his men. They always know what to do and when to do it. For instance, in that tenth inning with one out and the crowd getting anxious for supper, the coach sent in Cook, the regular first baseman and the best hitter of his squad, who had an injured foot, to bat for Gilroy, a rather weak sticker. Cook allowed a wild pitch to hit him, then ambled to first base.

McNamara Ends Game.

Watson ran for Cook, and after the next batter popped out, he stole second as neatly as George Sisler might have done it. The next batter walked and then the following one, McNamara, a sturdy outfielder who can pole 'em, drove a line single over second base. The speedy Watson was just fast enough to leg it home with the winning run.

There was more strategy and efficiency in the play of the Princeton men all the way than was shown by their rivals. They didn't get many hits, they made the best possible use of every blow.

Southpaw Starts Game.

Princeton, figuring this as one of its minor games, decided to use a minor pitcher, Thomas, a southpaw was started but after the enemy nicked him for a pair of runs in the first inning, he was removed, and Jeffries, a sophomore and a righthander took the job. He didn't have a lot of speed but he had fine control and good headwork, except on one occasion.

In the seventh with the Tufts fellows still a run behind and a man on second and the pitcher at bat, young Jeffries pulled a boner or else he thought he could slip over a trick. He got two strikes on the batter on a pair of fouls. Then, with the call two and nothing and well aware that his batter was lost with a curve ball, Jeffries tried to shoot a fast one past him. A two bagger was the result which tied the count and made the battle last until the tenth. At all other times Jeffries worked like a big leaguer.

Capt. Fisher Behind Bat.

Jeffries and Hubie Margetts, also of last year's staff, are the most reliable hurlers. Trudeau Thomas, the young southpaw is only a freshie and needs experience. Capt. Fisher one of the best catchers in eastern college circles is still back of the bat. Besides Cook there is young "Bud" Weiser, for first base! McPhee, captain of last year is at second and is quite a star; Berg at short is far from Tremble as a player but is about the average; Gilroy at third is a fine fielder but weak hitter.

In the outfield, Botting in center is a midget leadoff man and a whiz in fielding, McIlvain in right hits in the cleanup spot and McNamara in left is the husky one of the squad.

Same Spirit as in 1920.

Princeton has all the spirit of last year but will have to do some tall hustling to equal the 1920 record. Looks like Holy Cross or Penn might knock the Tigers flat right now. Maybe they won't when old Bill Clark puts on the finishing touches. However, if they are downed for diamond honors, it will not be because they didn't play the game as it should be played. Score:

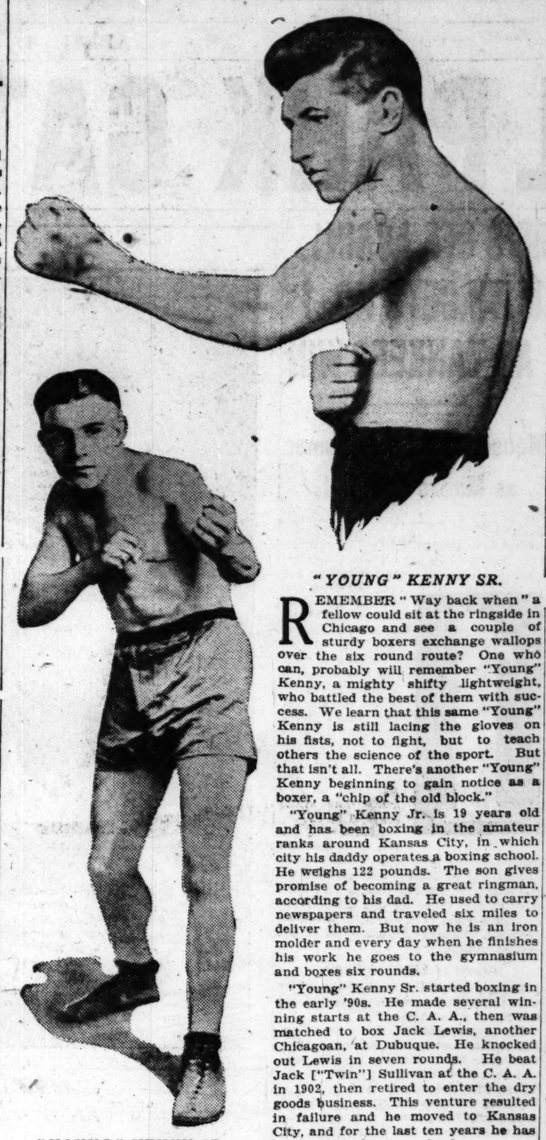
PATER-FILIUS COMBINATION



"YOUNG" KENNY SR.

"YOUNG" KENNY JR.

REMEMBER "Way back when" a fellow could sit at the ringside in Chicago and see a couple of sturdy boxers exchange wallops over the six round route? One who can, probably will remember "Young" Kenny, a mighty shifty lightweight, who battled the best of them with success. We learn that this same "Young" Kenny is still lacing the gloves on his fists, not to fight, but to teach others the science of the sport. But that isn't all. There's another "Young" Kenny beginning to gain notice as a boxer, a "chip of the old block."

"Young" Kenny Jr. is 19 years old and has been boxing in the amateur ranks around Kansas City, in which city his daddy operates a boxing school. He weighs 122 pounds. The son gives promise of becoming a great ringman, according to his dad. He used to carry newspapers and traveled six miles to deliver them. But now he is an iron molder and every day when he finishes his work he goes to the gymnasium and boxes six rounds.

"Young" Kenny Sr. started boxing in the early '90s. He made several winning starts at the C. A. A., then was matched to box Jack Lewis, another Chicagoan, at Dubuque. He knocked out Lewis in seven rounds. He beat Jack ["Twin"] Sullivan at the C. A. A. in 1902, then retired to enter the dry goods business. This venture resulted in failure and he moved to Kansas City, and for the last ten years he has conducted a boxing school.

2 NAMES BLAZE OUT IN AMERICAN BOXING AND TURF

BY RAY PEARSON.

This is a story of two men who specialize in sport. There are other men who specialize in sport, but they aren't like these two. That's why writing about the "big two" is worth while. It is a cinch that if these men weren't identified with boxing and horse racing, those sports wouldn't be on the plane they now occupy in America.

TEX RICKARD. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

Because the writer dabbles in boxing we will first tell something of George L. (Tex.) Rickard, present home New York City. Rickard has done more for boxing in the United States than any other man, and before he is through—and it will not be very long, either—he will be credited with having done more for the glove sport throughout the world than any other individual.

Always On the Square.

Regardless of what Rickard may do in future, it can safely be said that he has accomplished more than any other man in America and the reason is that he always has been a "square shooter." Go back to the start of Rickard's roving existence, which carried him in all directions the compass points—to Texas, to the wild west when it was wild, to far-away Alaska and to South America—always moving in carefree, although rough company, and one easily may gain the impression that such association does not tend to produce characters prone to play loose and suspiciously.

That very association made a gambler of Rickard in his early days. He still is a gambler. He is the kind of man who will back his convictions, and back them heavily, but if the deal is not a square one, Rickard must be counted out.

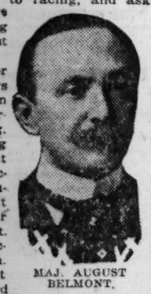
Delivers What He Promises.

He plays a big game and plays it squarely. That's the way he started playing when he entered pugilism and offered purses that astounded the world. He paid the purses he promised, regardless of size. He kept his word with the boxers, their managers, and, of far greater importance, with the public.

But probably the greatest thing that can be said of Rickard is: "He never starts anything that he doesn't finish." That's Rickard. That's the kind of man pugilism needs. Too bad we haven't a lot more like him to boost the game.

Turf Has One Belmont.

Now let's hop to racing, and ask where is there another toprung man like August Belmont?



MAJ. AUGUST BELMONT.

New York for years and years back has been famous for thoroughbred racing. There is racing there today, and it is still great racing because August Belmont wields the power that controls it. It is racing as racing should be run.

Belmont is not of the Rickard type. Wealthy and with other powerful financial interests, he turned to the turf years ago because of his love for horseflesh. Racing is a part of his life, and when attempts were made to kill the sport in New York a few years ago, Belmont fought for it and New York succeeded in keeping it. It probably always will keep it as long as Belmont is at the helm.

SUPREME COURT O. K.'S FIGHT BODY

New York, April 16.—The New York state boxing commission acted within its jurisdiction in suspending James Twyford, manager, and his boxer, Packey O'Gatty, according to a decision given today in Supreme court. The suspension came as a result of a bout between O'Gatty and Moore in which some irregularities were connected with O'Gatty's claim of being fouled.

Facing Sixty Mile Gale, Lino Wins Traps Contest

A little 60-mile gale meant nothing to Charles Irgang, Jerome Lino, and Charles Unrath, members of the Lincoln Park Gun club, yesterday. They stood on the banks of the lake, and, facing the stiff breeze, shot at innumerable clay birds. Lino won the match. Next Sunday another shoot will be held. There will be dedication exercises for the new clubhouse.

British Wrestling Star in Contest Here April 25

CHARLIE PADDOCK, MARVEL IN TRACK SPRINTING

BY ROBERT EDGREN.

THE east always is incredulous about anything good that comes out of the west. New York, for instance, can't believe that it's possible to make a world's record anywhere but on Manhattan island. Hence the "doubt" about Charlie Paddock's two world sprinting records, said "doubt" having originated in New York, 3,000 miles away from where Paddock ran.

I happen to know Paddock rather well, and to know that he has been busy all through an unusually warm and sunny winter in southern California improving his running form with the intention of trying to make new world sprinting records in what may be his last year of track competition.

Wefers Calls Paddock Fastest.

Paddock is the fastest sprinter ever seen in spikes, according to no less an authority than Bernard J. (Bernie) Wefers. He has amazing natural speed. He won the inter-allied sprints, the national championship, and an Olympic championship, always running very close to world record time, and all without a perfect sprinting form. Wefers told me last year that if Paddock perfected his form he would break all sprinting records with ease. It seems he's doing it.

Paddock's magnificent 220 yard run in 20 4-5 seconds, two-fifths of a second faster than Wefer's record made a quarter of a century ago and three times equaled by other runners, may seem odd at a time that is considered early season in the east. But this is the athlete's best time for top notch form in California. He has had two months of warm, dry weather—perfect training weather. It would be harder for him to reach record form later, with summer heat as a handicap. Paddock also ran the 100 yards in record time, 9 3-5 seconds, equaling the mark reached by Drew, Kelly, and Arthur Duffy.

Runs to Records on Old Track.

As comment on the probable worth of the performance, let me add that the University of California track, where the races were run in a dual meet between California and Southern California, is one of the best tracks in the country. It is a track that has been used for more than thirty years, and that always has been well sheltered from all winds by a large grove of eucalyptus trees as well as by hills and a high grandstand. It is the best sheltered track I ever saw in this country.

Many world's records have been made on that track, including the 100 yard record of 9 3-5 seconds by Drew. The timers at these meets are men who have timed for many years, and are accustomed to timing champions—men as experienced as any in the country.

Paddock earned and will no doubt be credited with two of the best marks on the record books.

Unprecedented Performance.

If any support for Paddock's record claims was needed, he furnished it himself the next week when he ran in a dual meet at Stanford university, winning the 100 yard dash in world's record time, 9 3-5 seconds, and winning the 220 in 21 seconds flat, a fifth of a second under the old record. I consider this the most remarkable performance I have known in a long experience in athletics. Competing myself on track and field for twenty-four years, I have known all of the great champions of the last quarter century, and have seen many record breaking performances.

CHARLIE PADDOCK. [Photo: Und. & Und.]

But no champion has ever before run as consistently in record breaking form as this boy from Pasadena. It was remarkable enough for a champion to break a twenty-five year old record in the 220 yard dash and equal the world's figures in the classic 100, but to repeat such a marvelous performance within a week is little short of a miracle. It marks Charlie Paddock as incomparably the greatest short distance runner the world has seen since stop watches were invented.

Something About Greeks.

Perhaps the ancient Greeks produced his equal, for the Greeks held their Olympian games at regular intervals for over a thousand years. The Greeks were tall blonde men in ancient times, well proportioned, well trained athletes through generation after generation, and athletic competition was an important part of their daily life, and considered necessary to the training of warriors for defense of the state against foreign invasion.

History tells of feats of strength, speed, and endurance unequaled in modern times. Greek messengers carrying news of Persian invasion crossed the mountains afoot, covering approximately a hundred miles a day.

Charlie Paddock is a small man compared with these ancients, but he is built for speed. Like all successful sprinters, Paddock is very sturdy. He is of moderate height, but deep chested, broad shouldered, with good arms, a strong neck, and exceptionally thick and muscular legs. He lives in Pasadena, studies at Southern California in Los Angeles, goes between his home and college in a car that he always drives himself, and spends just about the average amount of time in athletic training. He is a bundle of nerves. Charlie is a smiling, pleasant fellow, always in good humor, yet under the surface he is always at high tension before a race, even while in training.

Is Follower of Hunches.

He is as volatile as a Frenchman, exuberant one moment and thoughtful the next. A "hunch" has him dancing all over the place. He believes in "hunches." When he started for the last Olympic his trainer told me:

"It's all right—Charlie will win sure. He told his father he has a 'hunch' he'll win, and nothing in the world can beat him.

Whenever Paddock goes on the track he raps his knuckles against a piece of wood. Whether he does it to offset any possible hoodoo, or for a joke, no one knows, but as soon as he "knocks wood" he steps to the starting line with a clear mind.

Paddock Slow Starter.

Paddock is steady on the mark, and until this year he never has been a very fast starter. He has always depended upon swinging deliberately into his stride and then gradually increasing his speed all the way to the tape. Bernard J. Wefers, the N. Y. A. C. coach and former record holder, told Paddock that if he would get away faster he'd break all sprinting records with ease, and taught him how to leave the mark in a nearly erect position instead of a low crouch and get into a full stride at the first leap. He also taught Paddock how to use the swing of his arms. These details may have added the trifle of speed needed to send Charlie over the sprint courses in new world's record time.

If Charles goes much faster they'll have to time him with an electric spark, the way they record the velocity of a bullet.

Woods and Waters by LARRY ST. JOHN

THE TROUT OF OPENING DAY.

BACK in the days when the trout season opened April 15 in Wisconsin, instead of on May 1 as now, the writer sallied forth to participate in the festivities. It was an average, showery April day when we left home, but we awoke the next morning to find the ground covered with snow.

"It's a fine day—for coasting," I remarked to my host.

"Well," he replied, "you can't always tell about them trout."

And so it proved.

When we had reached the stream, we discovered that we had failed to bring the worms, a similar but more low brow offense than that committed by my friend Cooley, who hiked many miles up the Batchewana only to learn that he had left his fly book back at camp.

While a youngster who was with us hurried back for the worms we felt the necessity of doing something, if only to keep warm. So we tied on a leader and three flies, this being before we learned the superiority of one fly well fished.

Standing on a high bank without attempting to conceal ourselves, expecting to catch as many alligators as trout, we made a cast to the other snowclad bank—and two trout rose! We did not land either of them, nor did we raise another, but it goes to prove the old tradition that fish strike when least expected, and to disprove the hoary rule that trout do not rise to flies when snow water is running into the stream.

However, the chances are that even on May 1 conditions will not be favorable for fly fishing. An average spring, with the usual amount of rain, either locally or at the headwaters, is likely to roil the water to the point where worms will yield and flies will not.

It is not that the trout cannot see the flies—for anyone who has seen a hungry fontinalis dash out of his lair and seize a tiny dry fly in the froth, would willingly believe that a trout could see a no-seeum through ten feet of old fashioned New Orleans 'lasses—but they are searching the bottom for food.

Of course, much depends on the stream. There's a heap of difference between a stream with clay or mud banks, and one that flows through sandy or rocky country. Then, as my friend remarked, you can't always tell about them trout!

A friend—a real expert who hasn't missed an opening day in Wisconsin for more than a quarter of a century—tells me that the one real fly for early fishing is the March Brown, with Queen occupying second place. His crony, equally expert, once called me aside and whispered, "Don't pay any attention to that old crank; he don't know what he's talkin' about. If you want an early fly, why nothing equals a Rube Weed, and, next to that, try Governor."

Thus, you see, you can't always tell about them trout fishermen, either! The four flies mentioned above are good patterns. I would add to them a few of Coachman, Royal Coachman and a few hackles, and for Michigan water, Black Gnat and Mershon. These, you understand, are merely my suggestions, and fly fishermen who know more about it than I do would perhaps give a different list of patterns that will bring home the smoked side meat.

But when whatever patterns you use fall down, there is still one old reliable that generally gets 'em, and this is the garden hackle, the common angleworm. It may be any kind of an angleworm from a big night crawler to the red worm from behind the old red barn, although a worm of moderate plumpness from rich garden soil, well scoured and carried in damp moss, is pleasanter to handle, livelier on the hook and more attractive to the trout.

HORSESHOE THROWERS! HARDING TAKES JOB AS CHIEF OF "RINGERS"

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 16. — President Harding today accepted the honorary presidency of the National Association of Horseshoe Throwers. HOREMANS TO PLAY CUE MATCHES WITH SUTTON THIS WEEK

Edouard Horemans, the Belgian cueist, will pay Chicago his second visit of the season this week, meeting George B. Sutton of Chicago, former world's champion, in two 1,600 point games at Mussey's Madison street room. The first game will be at 18-2, starting Wednesday afternoon, when the first block of 400 points will be staged, a similar block following at night. On Friday afternoon the players will begin 1,600 points at 18-1, finishing Saturday night.

Interest in Horemans' performances here will center on his performances as compared with Champion Hoppe, who in a week's play here against Charles Peterson averaged 52 64-68 for 3,600 points at 18-2. Most of the capable critics believe Hoppe unbeatable at 18-2, but concede that Horemans has a chance to win at 18-1, as most of his points are made at this style of play.

Sutton has been playing finely and recently in practice ran 424 points, while in his match with McAndless he ran 233 and twice averaged 150 for 300 points.

I. A. C. TANKERS IN COAST RACES

Norman Ross and Robert Skelton, tank stars of the Illinois A. C., arrived in San Francisco yesterday to compete in National A. A. U. swims to be held by coast clubs next week.

Skelton, who is National A. A. U. 440 yard breast stroke champion, will compete in the 220 yard breast stroke at the Olympic club, San Francisco, April 20, and Ross will swim in the 150 yard back stroke April 27 at the Los Angeles A. C.

Coach Bachrach is counting on both of these swimmers to win points, asserting yesterday that they have an excellent chance of winning.

In the final week's shoot Chicago Rifle club led with 998 of a possible 1,000 points to 997 for Centennial. The Centennial shooters' huge lead in the local end of the national competition was built up by proficiency in off-hand shooting, for at the prone position the Chicago club was practically equal.

CHAMP TILDEN RANKS WORLD'S BEST 10 NET MEN

BY WILLIAM T. TILDEN II.

[World's Authority on Tennis.]

Did you ever happen to notice the howl of protest that goes up every year following the ranking of our first ten tennis players? Of course you did, and you probably are one who found some fault or other with every list issued.

WILLIAM T. TILDEN [TRIBUNE Photo.]

Of course, no list is infallible whether based on records or on opinion. By that is meant, in a series of matches played between this first ten, No. 1 would not be likely to defeat all the others and very likely No. 7 might take a fall out of No. 2, and so on. It is the interest we all have in just such upsets that is back of the kicks against the published rankings of the U. S. L. T. A. If tennis were otherwise, it would not be sport.

Following the last season the thought occurred to me that it would be a good plan to rank the various tennis players of the world according to the way the writer figured them out after meeting most of them or having seen them play. So he got down to the task. It wasn't much trouble to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion. But when he took the time to compare records he found that an entirely different order resulted than in the one formed by the more simple plan of personal viewpoint.

As a result of these efforts he would highly recommend that all who object to the rankings of our own countrymen every year apply a similar test at the end of every season and before the official ranking is issued. Such a plan will convince the skeptical that rating players is a real task, as well as a most thankless one.

Dope on Davis Cup Stars.

Another reason for my delving into the ranking of the ten best in the world was to arrive at some sound dope on the coming Davis cup matches.

In this way the writer arrived at the following rankings. One is based entirely on the records of the players during the last year. The other is based on personal estimates of their abilities, formed upon matches played with those named or on their play against others with which the writer did meet, or on comparisons:

RECORD.

1—W. M. Johnston, U. S. A.
2—J. C. Parke, England.
3—N. E. Brookes, Australia.
4—A. R. F. Kingscote, England.
5—Zenzo Shimidzu, Japan.
6—G. L. Patterson, Australia.
7—Louis Raymond, South Africa.
8—Maj. Mavrogordato, England.
9—R. N. Williams II., U. S. A.
10—Andre Gobert, France.

PERSONAL.

1—W. M. Johnston, U. S. A.
2—N. E. Brookes, Australia.
3—R. N. Williams, U. S. A.
4—A. R. F. Kingscote, England.
5—J. C. Parke, England.
6—Ichiyu Kumagae, Japan.
7—G. L. Patterson, Australia.
8—Andre Gobert, France.
9—Zenzo Shimidzu, Japan.
10—W. E. Davis, U. S. A.

Few Words About Johnston.

Quite naturally the rating based on records needs an explanation. The other will have to stand as it is, as it is merely a matter of opinion. But what amusing contradictions!

Notwithstanding Johnston's defeat in England at the Wimbledon championships by J. C. Parke, he should precede Parke. Later, he disposed of Parke in the Davis cup affair, as he did Gobert, Brookes, and Patterson. He scored a victory over me at Queens club, London, and I just managed to overcome him in our national singles and the East vs. West matches.

Parke earns second position by reason of his one victory over Johnston. He lost to Williams at Norwood, England, and I defeated him decisively in both the Wimbledon event and Davis cup affairs. My own view is that Parke ranks no higher than fifth, though he is one of the most dangerous match opponents because of his ability to rise to great heights under stress. His lack is consistency.

Brookes Is Old Reliable.

Norman E. Brookes of Australia earns third ranking. His game against both Johnston and myself in the Davis cup was phenomenal, as he pressed us to the limit. Personally, I consider him second only to Johnston and he is today the best player in Australia.

Maj. Kingscote all but crowds the great Brookes from the higher position. He carried both Johnston and me to very close five set matches. Brookes has the call on him for the reason that we were in better form against Brookes than against Kingscote. The scores were nearly identical.

The placing of Zenzo Shimidzu at No. 5 cannot be questioned by record, since he was runner-up at Wimbledon when he defeated Gobert and Mavrogordata after the latter had eliminated Williams.

Patterson Hard to Place.

Gerald Patterson is a hard man to place. He is given No. 6 solely by reason of his having won the Australian title. He did nothing else of note, losing decisively to me three times and once to Johnston. By virtue of winning the Olympic title over Kumagae, Louis Raymond earns seventh place, although I doubt if he is really a first ten man.

Much of the same can be said concerning Mavrogordato at No. 8. His victory over Norris Williams entitled him to that in the international ranking. Norris Williams is a great player, but one who does not do himself justice. His victories over Johnston and Parke are offset by defeats at the hands Mavrogordato and M. G. Ritchie.

NEW CLUBHOUSE OF GLEN VIEW GOLF CLUB

The new building that rose from the ruins of the old, destroyed by fire.

REPLACING the old wooden clubhouse, which was destroyed by fire, the new home of the Glen View club is nearing completion. The old house was the home of many happy golfing memories and to some extent it has been copied in the new structure, but is more commodious. It resembles to some extent the old English manor houses. Historic material has been used in the construction, some of the bricks coming from the ruins of the old Fort Dearborn building. In the interior the same fanciful construction has been followed. The approximate cost was $250,000.

NOTES OF THE GOLF LINKS

OPENING shots in the season's competitive events were carded for yesterday at Olympia Fields, Calumet, and Jackson park, but King Blizzard covered the Chicago district territory with a blanket of slush. The most useful club was a broad bladed snow shovel. Local professionals who came into the loop yesterday to escape the solitude of their clubs said the storm would set the courses back several days. Boy! Page Old Sol.

Robert A. Gardner, vice president of the United States Golf association, returned yesterday from New York, where he attended a meeting of the executive committee. Sites for the 1922 championships were considered, but no selections were announced other than that the amateur championship would go to an eastern club.

Secretary F. E. Bell has issued the schedule of the Calumet club. The first event was scheduled for yesterday. The qualifying round for a team sweepstakes is billed for next Saturday. The fixed trophy events are the President's cup, Whiting cup, F. W. Ellis cup, club championship, and Thomas cup. The contract for decorating and furnishing the new clubhouse has been let. Locker room and showers are already in. Among the new members are Joe N. McDonald, for a number of years prominent in high school and intercollegiate golf; F. N. Browning, W. J. Donahue, H. M. Hall, J. A. Hermes, H. R. James, G. H. Lindsay, J. Z. Rowe, F. N. Schroth, H. D. Swain, M. J. Williams, and H. R. James.

Alfred Hackbarth, the new professional at Park Ridge club, has put the course in excellent shape and play on the permanent greens will start May 7. Chairman James B. Davies of the sports and pastimes committee has completed his schedule and tournament play will begin May 30.

C. A. C. TO STAGE INDUSTRIAL PIN TOURNEY MAY 7

The first annual championship industrial bowling tournament to be held under the auspices of the Chicago Association of Commerce will commence on May 7 at the Randolph street alleys. A lively interest has been manifested by industrial bowlers in this meet and it is estimated that the entries will exceed 600 teams.

There will be no limit to the number of teams a firm may enter to compete in the tournament. The eligibility rules require that a bowler must have been in the employ of the firm he represents on or before Feb. 1, 1921, and that his firm must be a member of the Chicago Association of Commerce.

Three Events Listed.

The events will be the usual bowling tournament events, namely: Five man teams, doubles and singles championship, with a liberal distribution of prizes, and a special prize for the winner of the all-events.

The entries close at midnight April 27.

The purpose of the meet is to encourage and foster among the industrial bowlers of Chicago a spirit of good fellowship, and to create interest in industrial bowling by establishing annually a record of industrial bowling. The organization elected to promote the tournament follows:

President—O. W. Schmidt, R. W. Hosmer company.
First vice president—W. D. Randall, International Harvester company.
Second vice president—Walter Juergensen, Standard Oil company.
Third vice president—B. C. Dezur, Crane company.
Fourth vice president—T. I. Nolan, General Electric company.
Secretary—J. T. Hausen, Commonwealth Edison company.
Assistant secretary and tournament manager—E. R. Greenfield, Commonwealth Edison company.
Treasurer—N. H. Norgren, Chicago Association of Commerce headquarters.

FOR PLAYERS OF WHIST
by A. R. METCALFE

TRUMPING PARTNER'S ACE.

TRUMPING partner's ace is an expression commonly used to describe utter stupidity or ignorance. The play is at times correctly used by experts, however, and when the ace in question is the first card played in a deal it becomes play of a very high order, as in the deal given below:

THE HANDS.

S—J, 7, 3.
H—A, Q, 9, 7, 6, 2.
C—K, 7, 6, 3.
D—None.

S—A, K, Q, 10, 8, 6.

S—5.
H—K, 10, 8, 5, 4, 3.
C—A, J, 10.
D—9, 6, 3.

THE BIDDING.

Score, 0—0. North dealt and bid one heart. East passed, south bid three diamonds, west three spades, and the bidding closed. North had the initial lead.

THE PLAY.

West secured eight tricks only.

When the ace of hearts was led at trick 1 south knew that his partner could not have a diamond.

The declarer could not hold more than two hearts, and might hold only one, and south played safe by trumping his partner's ace. He knew that in case there were two hearts in the west hand he could trust north to trump the ace of diamonds, which south led at trick 4, and lead another heart.

When this did not occur south continued the diamond suit and west could not make his contract, no matter how he handled his trumps.

Had south failed to trump his partner's ace at trick 1, the declarer would have won the game, regardless of the subsequent play of his adversaries.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE.

The next is a rather better deal of the same order:

THE HANDS.

S—None.
H—8, 5.
C—9, 7, 5, 4, 3.

West secured nine tricks.

When dummy was exposed, the only spades which south did not see were the ace and queen. South reasoned that his partner could have neither of these, else, with the ace and king of diamonds he would have supported his partner's strong spade bid.

Therefore, by trumping his partner's ace and king of diamonds, south was able to lead spades twice and allow north to ruff off both the ace and queen of that suit, thereby saving the game and defeating the contract.

The writer was dummy in this particular deal.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

St. Joseph, Mich.—Kindly give a decision on the following play in bridge whist:

East bid one heart, south two clubs, west two no trump, north passed, and thinking bids closed, led the ace of clubs. East, after seeing card exposed, bid three spades, south passed, west bid three no trump, which closed the bids, and called for the ace of clubs in north hand to be led. North refused to play the ace and led a small card from the club suit to his partner.

Was west right in calling for the ace of clubs to be played, two bids having been made after the card was exposed.

GEORGE W. S.

Ans.—The card was subject to call. Law 44 of the Whist club, New York, is as follows:

"If, during the declaration, any player lead or expose a card, such card must be left face upward on the table and the partner of the player in error must thereafter pass whenever it is his turn to declare."

If the player in error later become declarer or dummy, the card in question is no longer exposed; otherwise it remains an exposed card until played.

If the player on the left of the player in error later become declarer, he may, on the first trick, forbid a lead of the suit of the exposed card.

Through Its Steadfast Reliability Essex Leads in Today's Market

That Quality is as Unusual in Cars of Its Class as Its Wonderful Performance and Its Price

With 50,000 owners giving a solid verdict for Essex reliability it is natural that you know the car best for that quality.

No other thing counts so much with men buying cars today. Of course they are alive to the appeal of low cost and economical maintenance. But not at the sacrifice of quality.

It is because Essex with its low price, gives qualities obtainable elsewhere only in far costlier cars, that it has so notably centered the spring buying.

HAYNES 50
THE SMALLER AND LIGHTER HAYNES CAR

From an engineering standpoint, the Haynes Fifty is equal to the most critical comparison. Its power plant, the famous Haynes six-cylinder motor, manufactured in the Haynes institution, has the strength and dependability of that of much larger cars; it is so well balanced that it operates with the greatest ease. The Haynes Fifty, with its 121-inch wheelbase, its scientific, mechanical construction, makes for greater economy in operation, as shown by the official test, when a strictly stock model taken right from the factory, at Kokomo, was driven over severe roads to Pittsburg—establishing a record of 18.7 miles to the gallon.

Embodies features of costlier cars

A full five-passenger car, it absolutely lacks the appearance of smallness. Mechanically it merits the enthusiastic endorsement of those who are versed in such matters. Physically, it appeals to the eye in its lines and finish. Its roomy seats are deeply and restfully upholstered in genuine leather.

Starting is controlled in the simplest, most convenient manner by a finger button. Four cord tires, 33 x 4 inches, and a spare tire carrier attached to the rear of the frame are standard equipment.

Fulfills demand of present day

In producing the Haynes Fifty many years of preliminary work were spent in making a car which would meet the desires of those who prefer one which combines quality with its lighter weight. That such a car is now available at $1985 shows the full advantage of Haynes engineering and manufacturing principles which have been proved over a period of 28 years. Now that it has received the hearty endorsement of experienced owners and dealers, the success of this car—the Haynes Fifty—is definitely established. You are urged to see it at your Haynes dealer's showroom and to place your order as soon as possible, because of the increasing desire for this particular car.

AT 17 SHE ASKS COURT TO ANNUL TWO MARRIAGES

"Which of my husbands shall I choose?"

This is the perplexing question confronting 17 year old Mrs. Helen Audrey-Silvers-Hackett-Green wood. Before Judge Harry A. Lewis in the Superior court yesterday she explained that she had married two men last year and wanted both marriages annulled.

"But," the judge explained, "from what I can see, you will have to be the wife of one of them for two years and then obtain a divorce on the grounds of desertion. If your first marriage is valid, your second is void. If your first is void, your second is valid."

Which Shall She Choose?

"But which one shall I choose?" the puzzled Helen pondered. "One of them is a gypsy. I only lived with him three days. The other could not provide for me, and I had to return home after a week."

She told of her two romances.

On Oct. 29, 1919, at Crown Point, she married Merle Hackett of Hammond, Ind., whom she described as a gypsy. A justice of the peace married them, though she was only 16, she says. Her father, J. R. Silvers, an electrical contractor of 6820 South Green street, contends this marriage was void because the marriage license was obtained by perjury. Anyway, Helen returned home after three days of married life.

Marries Again in Seven Weeks.

Seven weeks later she met Dave Paul Greenwood of Valparaiso, Ind., and again fell in love at first sight. Thinking her first marriage was without legal status, she married him on Nov. 17 without her parents' consent.

"After a week of married life we starved out," Helen declared, "and I returned home to my parents."

Judge Lewis took the case under advisement.

A Daniels Come to Judgment!

BEBE DANIELS.

Santa Ana, Cal., April 16.—Bebe Daniels, a motion picture actress, who last night entered the Orange county jail here to begin serving a ten day sentence for speeding, may be wasting her time so far as it applies on her sentence, it developed today.

The district attorney and sheriff pointed out there were no commitment papers in Miss Daniels' case, as she had appealed from the township justice court, and her case was in the hands of the Superior court.

Upon learning of this, Miss Daniels instructed her attorney to dismiss her appeal and obtain commitment papers from the justice court as quickly as possible.

Meantime, they declared, Miss Daniels, who remained in jail, was "merely a guest of Orange county."

JURY RELIEVES CROATS OF FAKE RELIEF WORKER

As the result of a jury's decision before Judge Charles Thomson yesterday, the Croatian relief fund will have to worry along without the services of one Matthew Tisha, voluntary worker extraordinary. The jury sent him to jail for from one to ten years for operating a confidence game.

Tisha and Charles Miller, address unknown, arrived in Chicago some weeks ago. Miller carried a bulging billfold. He met Joe Elish, a fellow Croatian, in a west side hotel, and opened the pocketbook. Elish gasped. Four rolls of bills as thick as a Sunday newspaper met his gaze.

A Modest Fellow.

"There's $18,400 there," Miller said. "I'm going to give it to the Croatian relief fund. I help them a lot." Elish was duly impressed.

"However," Miller added, "I want to keep this gift anonymous. I'd like to get a couple honest fellows to send it for me."

Tisha spoke up. "There's two of us here," he said.

"Fine. But you ought to put up some money to show you are really honest."

Mr. Elish Succumbs.

Elish did not believe in banks. He kept $1,500 behind the pictures in his parlor. Next day he again talked with Miller and Tisha. The conversation ended with them all placing their money in a grip. Elish was given the key and told to take out an extra $1,000 for himself, then send the balance to Croatia. Elish notified the police when the key did not fit. Four $1 bills pasted on a newspaper were in the grip.

Assistant State's Attorney O'Connell, who prosecuted the case, estimated that the pair have collected more than $50,000 in relief funds in the last two years.

Hundreds of pupils submitted essays, and Edward's was adjudged best by H. D. Russell of La Salle Extension university. The picture was presented to Edward yesterday in the assembly hall of the Robert Burns school by O. B. Ransopher, president of the Boys' club.

Certified Milk

Nearly everyone who dines at the North American is astonished by our extremely big portions. They often ask why we are able to give such big portions of good food at prices so far below those charged by other first class restaurants and hotels.

We invite our patrons to make suggestions and about the only criticism we ever hear is that our portions are too big. Perhaps we should reduce them. But we won't. We believe the people who dine here like our big generous portions and it pleases us very much when we see one of them splitting an order with a companion and thereby getting a dinner of several courses for a very small price.

Here is an actual case which illustrates how our big food portions help in getting prices down: A gentleman and his wife had dinner here recently. His order, for both, consisted of:

Breast of Chicken with Bacon .	65 cents
Combination Salad with Thousand Island Dressing, . .	30 cents
Bread and Butter for two, .	10 cents
Pot of Coffee for two, . .	25 cents
Ice Cream, two portions, .	30 cents

The portions of Chicken and Salad were ample for serving them both. So the dinner for two cost a total of $1.60—80c each. And that was all they paid. There was no waiter to tip.

In speaking to our manager later the gentleman said: "You have the greatest dining place in Chicago, or, for that matter, in the entire country. In any hotel or restaurant, serving food as good as yours, the dinner my wife and I ate would have cost not less than $3.00, not counting tips. Hereafter we are regular customers of yours."

When you can get big portions of the best food at prices so low is it good sense to pay twice as much merely to have it carried to you?

THE PEOPLES AND A SUPERSTATE.

The British empire is an approximation of a superstate. It operates much as H. G. Wells' superstate would have to work. It has self-governing dominions where the people have all the individuality and freedom they want and it has territories where the people have just as much as the British want to give them.

Any superstate would have to consider the varieties of peoples embraced by it and some of them would not be self-governing. The British superstate has for its solidity a common language for its self-governing dominions, even for South Africa. That is a solidity no other superstate could count upon having.

Austria-Hungary was a small superstate, imposed upon a great many languages and nationalities which now, in the rearrangement of Europe, have individuality, customs frontiers, armies and more quarrels than they had when they were kept together under the Hapsburgs.

It is the present British policy that if one of the self-governing dominions wishes to separate from the empire it will not be prevented by force. Ireland is outside all British theories of normal administration. It is neither self-governing nor successfully governed. The British reserve most of their mistakes and blunders for Ireland and concentrate their failures there.

Outside of Ireland the British superstate is a fairly easy riding system of government, easing up strains wherever they develop and, as has been said, operating on the base of the world's greatest language. In spite of this some of the self-governing dominions are uncertain whether they want to remain or can remain in the empire and some of the governed territories are wild to get out.

In South Africa the political fight for the empire was won, but it was long a doubtful one, and even now the decision may not be the final decision. India, in the other classification of states, wants out, although its prospects, free, are to go back to the savagery of the fights and tyranny which made life terrible for the people. For sensible East Indians the benefits of British rule are plain.

Under our own jurisdiction are the Philippines, where the material benefits of American custody are admitted, and where there is nothing against which reasonable complaint can be made. The Filipinos say they want their freedom, although they are sensible enough to know that they would be exchanging security without tyranny for freedom without safety.

Life in the Austro-Hungarian empire was more comfortable, more productive, safer and happier than it was in the Balkan states, but the Balkan states had what the nations of the Austro-Hungarian empire wanted. The latter was regarded as the wisest arrangement which could be made. The nationalities bullied each other, stormed at each other, had fights in parliament and tried to ride each other, but they were not cutting each other's throats as they were in the Balkans, where there were complete national units.

A superstate might come out of the policies, even the wisdom and humanity of administrators, statesmen, and governors, but it does not come out of the desires of the people. It is not a part of the instinct of the people it is supposed to benefit. In every case of which we know anything the popular tendency is to reject it no matter whether it is good or bad and to seek individuality in spite of the risks and dangers entailed.

People want their association based upon their nationality, their language and customs, their traditions, their likings and their prejudices. They do not love the people of another nation. They distrust, dislike, despise or hate other nationalities. They exalt themselves and disparage others.

That is not caused by their rulers, politicians or manipulators. It is the inbred habit of the people. An acceptable, benevolent superstate cannot be erected because the people do not want it. Frontiers, customs posts, armies, tariffs, etc., may be obnoxious to intelligence, but they result from the desire of people to group themselves.

Materially the nations of Austria-Hungary are worse off now than they were before the war and they are likely to have wars which would have been avoided under the empire or superstate, but they are arranged now in the independent groups in which the various peoples wanted to be arranged.

There is a disintegrating tendency in the British empire, although self-interest and language should hold the self-governing dominions together.

The human breed destroyed the superstate when it tried to build the tower of Babel.

VICIOUS CIRCLES.

"Wages cannot be reduced faster than living costs, for that simply reduces the purchasing power of the worker, and by diminishing the demand for products throws him out of a job again." That is simple truth voiced by a leader in the steel industry in reference to the recent reduction in the price of his product.

It presents the reverse of the "vicious circle" referred to so frequently after the war while prices and wages were chasing each other up to unequaled heights. Now we are confronted by a situation in which the demand for low costs is followed by a demand for low wages, which in turn would reduce purchasing power, removing the need of normal production, which in turn would bring about still lower wages or unemployment and eventually economic chaos.

Unlike the vicious circle of our days of extravagance, which could end only as it did, with the collapse of a topheavy economic structure, the viciousness can be removed from the present situation by application of the business policy and economic understanding revealed in the price reduction of the steel corporation and the statement of its representative. One thing only is essential—the reduction of prices in direct relation to any proposed reduction of wages.

If, for instance, the packers reduce wages and wholesale prices and the retail butcher refuses to reduce rates accordingly, the worker must buy less meat, the demand for meat products is lessened, fewer men are required in the industry, the farmer's sale of cattle is restricted, and every one along the line suffers. If, on the other hand, the retail butcher cuts prices in the same proportion as the packer, the demand for meats is maintained or increased, the packers can employ a normal number of workers, the farmer can sell, and all is as it should be.

Now business is poor. It can be revived on a sound basis through improvement in purchasing power. Reduced prices will improve purchasing power. Then wages and production costs can be cut simultaneously without cutting off sales, a reasonable profit can be taken, and improved demand will give business the stimulus it needs. In this way, and perhaps in this way only, can wages in all lines be put on a new level without further restricting business. A start has been made, but the adjustment is by no means complete.

THE SOLDIER BONUS.

The Illinois house of representatives has passed the bill which will provide for a $55,000,000 bond issue to pay a state bonus to the Illinois soldiers. The people must authorize the issuance of bonds. We believe they will. The senate has yet to pass the bill, but it is said that an agreement exists. Gov. Small will sign it, providing no legal defects are found. If they are found they will be remedied.

This is action which the state ought to approve and which we think will be approved. It has been said often enough and truthfully that no payment the state or nation could make could be a financial recompense to the soldiers. The nation does not earn enough money for that. The soldiers never have asked for a bonus in amount adequate to the value of their services. In value that remains beyond estimate and beyond recompense.

The bonus should indicate to the soldiers that the state has not forgotten them. The returning soldier's experience is to hear a great shout followed by a great silence. For a minute he is everything and then suddenly he seems to become nothing. Many of the men, particularly those who do not find life very easy or pleasant, cannot be blamed if they look about them with disillusioned eyes.

The communities go about their profit seeking ways and the soldiers can see people who did not go to war pushing their way successfully ahead. They have not lost an hour in their pursuit of money and pleasure. They have not lost a step in their progress. All they have to worry them is their income tax, and that makes them mad.

This disgusts the soldier and hardens him. He thinks he was bunkoed. He protected a careless, heedless, ungenerous, selfish lot who were safe enough behind him and who do not care anything about him when their danger is over. He says he never will be a sucker again, not if he can help it. The word patriotism becomes an ironic lure to him. He may develop a bad mood and one long enduring, because he thinks the people are indifferent to him.

We do not want the soldiers to have any reason for such feelings or opinions. The bonus which the state proposes to give should prove that the public has its heart in the right place and is not forgetful or neglectful. It is worth $55,000,000 in Illinois to make the soldiers know the state realizes they made sacrifices.

EXPERT DODGERS.

No one in the city hall wants to meet the tax issue squarely and some one is bound to do so. There are not enough alleys in town to give hiding places for the officials who want to spend money and do not want to raise it. If they spend it without raising it they will have another deficit. After that probably another nibble at the permanent improvement fund to pay current bills.

That is a procedure which ultimately would rob another generation of benefits it ought to receive and would hand it the bills for the expenses this generation ought to have paid.

The city hall would not allow the legislature to investigate city financing. The legislature now can say that it has no information upon which it can estimate Chicago's needs or by which it can fix a tax rate. The city wants the assembly to give it the money it needs, but Thompson does not intend to accept responsibility by asking for more taxes.

The city hall may be full of expert dodgers, but none expert enough to dodge the fact that outgo and income must balance.

Editorial of the Day

FEDERAL AID FOR ROADS.

[Bloomington Daily Pantagraph.]

In a conference last week at the White House with a good roads delegation, President Harding emphatically declared his opposition to federal appropriations for the construction of roads until the states shall have adopted an adequate system of road maintenance so that the roadbeds will not become worthless after two or three years of use.

The president has given considerable thought to the proposition and in his opinion the country is now spending millions of dollars in road construction which are wasted as far as any permanent good is concerned. He feels that under the present policy the states are spending at least $25,000 a mile for the construction of roads which in a short time will become impassable because of the failure to provide for upkeep.

Unless the states provide for a system of road maintenance the roads will be gone before the bonds sold to provide funds for their construction are one-quarter paid and then it will be necessary to put out a contract for new construction. Some patrol system must be devised by the states which will insure proper care for every foot of the highway.

President Harding has acted wisely in thus bringing the point of the importance of road maintenance to the front. In the nation-wide movement for good roads the universal cry has been "Build the roads" and there has been little or no attention paid to the question of the care of the roads after they are built.

Road maintenance is an even more important matter than road construction particularly in these times of high costs.

President Harding is right in taking the emphatic stand that the federal government should do nothing to encourage the states in road building until the states have demonstrated that they are prepared to properly care for the roads after they are constructed.

THE PHANTOM REAPER.

Yon little sloping field, perchance,
Was that in which the Highland Lass
Bade Wordsworth's spirit blithely dance
To song, as he did pass;
But where she sang is trudging now
A silent man behind his plow—
Yet, no; as in a vision fair,
The Highland Lass is reaping there!

The pensive beauty of her face,
Her eyes that tell of love and truth,
Her supple motions, full of grace,
Are those of Scotland's Ruth.
Ana lo! I hear, or seem to hear,
A flooding music, rising clear;
Mayhap the lark's, mayhap the voice
That bade the poet's heart rejoice.

Take, Time, my joyful dream away,
You cannot take the Reaper Lass;
She lives, immortal, crowned with bay
Of Song, while nations pass.
So long as men exalt the bright
High realm of loveliness and light,
So long as larks do sunward wing,
The Highland Maid shall live and sing.

LIFE is a series of resignations. One spends one's first thirty years chasing the IF behind the looking glass. After that one is satisfied with the reflection in any mirror. The first thirty years are the hardest.

A LETTER TO B. L. T.

Dear Judge:

Some gossip over news items may be worth the retailing. Viviani has again been visiting us. He hardly knew the old place. Professor Einstein arrived in New York not long ago and was given welcome. It then dawned upon some that he had not received a typical Class A welcome, whereupon it was proposed to offer him the keys and the freedom of the city. An alderman named Falconer, it is said, objected and cast a deciding vote. He did not know of Einstein. Great guffaws have come from the interior country. Falconer's friends took him outside and tipped him off and it will result in another vote so that Einstein may dry his eyes and have the keys to the city. Numerous persons have analyzed this event and think that Falconer was under the impression that Nicky Arnstein was being offered some keys. Be it as it may, I think the Key to the Cellar would be more appreciated when a foreigner leaves the freedom of the seas behind him. And had I been selecting the committee of welcome I should have tried to find the twelve who understand Einstein's theory of relativity. How often, as I have remarked before to you, do the ponderous things serve the gayety of nations!

Opportunity has been near my door several times in recent weeks. She meant to knock, but I seized her by the hair, on her first visit, dragged her in and finally she left—with a sigh. Since then she has returned, the sly jade. She likes caveman treatment and I thought that she was an ascetic and delicate. What a rousing welcome Opportunity always receives!—but one must not be tender with her. Thy URSUS.

PINK.

Abrupt.

Abrupt is a craggy phonetic. The voice sets out on the broad ab, to be suddenly confronted with the liquid r below, as one might come to the edge of a cliff. Scotland is a land of abrupts (abrupt as a noun now is seen chiefly in poetic composition; you will recall Milton's "vast abrupt") and its topographic perils have influenced greatly the dramatics of Scottish romance. Do you, in this connection, remember the predicament of the heroine of Scott's "The Antiquarian," who, with her father, faced the incoming tide at the base of a cliff? Nowadays abrupt more commonly is used to describe action, but it is in good repute as an adjective signifying verticality. Distinguishment of abrupt from its synonyms appears to be formal rather than productive of important contrasts.

The Wordsman

THE peak in world history was neither the inception of the planetary pull nor the land adaptation of the amphibia. It was when the ancestor of the canine learned to wag his tail. Then began the Dynasty of the Dog. He wagged himself into a kingship over the ancient Ethiopians, and the Egyptians placed him among the stars. Now, no electric coupé is tout correcte without him.

ABRACADABRA.

Sir: One of your Columb(n)ines (?) quotes from his dictionary the word Abracadabra as a "mystical word of unknown origin." Weller's French dictionary calls it a terme cabalistique; Ogilvie pronounces it the name of a Syrian deity; Dr. Funk dropped the widow's mite long enough to suggest Ab Ben Ruach Acadosch, the Hebrew for the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, as its probable origin; while, as an old time prophylactic, written in various triangular and other forms, charlatans gave it wide acceptance. Charley Gunther had a very inviting piece of the original Serpent's skin, vouched for by two learned Spanish doctors of the last century, with a charmingly scrolled abracadabra beneath their attests and seals, over which him and me gloated amicably. Really, for an anonymous word, it has rather an extended pedigree.

WHITES, NEGROES, HEALTH.

I HAVE just come from a meeting of the Negro teachers of Alabama. Before that audience Dr. Brown of Birmingham attributed the admittedly high death rate of Negroes as compared with whites to environment.

There is no question that a part of the excess is due to bad environment, but no more than a part of it can be explained on that basis. A considerable part of it is due to the poorer physique of the Negro, at least for that part of his physique having to do with the resistance to certain important diseases.

The reports of the registrar of vital statistics, United States census office, show that in seventy-five cities located in the south the excessive death rates as compared with northern cities are due to the excessive death rates of the Negro population. The Negroes in these cities make up 26.7 per cent of the population. The death rate of the whites is about the death rate for the country at large.

In thirteen northern cities in which the Negro population is 3.5 per cent of the total population the degree of excess of death rate above the average is due to the high Negro death rate.

In the list of diseases given by Dublin as being diseases in which Negroes have a death rate higher than whites we find listed typhoid fever, which is more due to bad environment than to any other factor. Perhaps malaria and syphilis belong in the same category. The remaining items on Dublin's list are more due to peculiarities of the stock than to environmental influences.

The fairest comparative statement I have seen anywhere is that of Surgeon General Ireland, found in the report of the surgeon general, United States army, 1919. It is a set of conclusions based upon observations in the army in 1917 and 1918. As compared with the white man, he says the Negro has the better nose and throat. Therefore, he has less nose and throat trouble and less tonsillitis. For the same reason he had less measles, scarlet fever, diphtheria, German measles, and the other ordinary infections which enter the body through the nose.

The Negro had better digestive organs and in consequence suffered from fewer diseases of the stomach and intestines. His black skin was better than the white man's skin. He had less army itch.

He had less influenza. When southern Negro troops were compared with southern white troops they were found to have had 66 per cent less influenza, less than one-half as much measles, one-fifth as much scarlet fever, one-fourth as much diphtheria, and one-third as much malaria. Fewer of them had intestinal parasites.

Negroes have less goiter and less locomotor ataxia. While Negro boys examined for the draft had seven times as much venereal disease as white boys, when the Negro boys were brought under military control the venereal disease rate fell to that of the whites.

But now for the other side of the picture. The Negro has much poorer lungs. His consumption rate is three times and his pneumonia rate is four and a half times that of the whites. His kidneys are poorer and, in consequence, he has much the higher Bright's disease rate.

His heart is poorer and, in consequence, he has much the higher heart disease rate. So prevalent is rickets among Negroes that the statement has been made that all Negro children have some rickets. The statement is an exaggeration.

ONLY SLIGHTLY DANGEROUS.

G. E. H. writes: "1. Is removal of piles a dangerous operation?

"2. How many days after operation would one be able to get around?"

REPLY.

1. No. There is some danger in undergoing any operation, but the danger of having a properly done operation for hemorrhoids is inconsiderable.

2. Some hemorrhoid operations are done in the office, the patient going to work in a few hours. As a rule a convalescence period of a week or two is required.

IT'S RICH IN STARCH.

Miss J. B. writes: "1. Is raw oatmeal harmful?

"2. Name some of foods helpful in overcoming constipation."

REPLY.

1. Many people digest raw starch well.

2. Bran as a cereal, bran bread, onions, radishes, peas, beans, salads, greens, turnips, squash, sauerkraut, sour milk, fruits.

CHANGE WAS TOO SUDDEN.

Mrs. E. D. writes: "My 14 month old baby weighs twenty pounds. When she was 11 months old one physician advised giving her a diet of bread, cereals, milk, vegetables, and fruit. She did not digest that diet well. She vomited and passed undigested vegetable matter. Another physician put her on an exclusive milk diet. On this diet she has lost two pounds, is finicky, has a rash, is constipated, and generally is not thriving. What shall I do?"

REPLY.

The first diet was the better one. You changed too suddenly. Change back to it, but go about it gradually.

FEED BABY LESS.

Mrs. W. S. writes: "My 6 month old baby has white flakes or scales similar to dandruff on the top of his head. I have used olive oil and benzoated lard on it and followed with washing this out, also combing. I care for it every day, but it does not clear up. Please advise me how to treat it."

REPLY.

Continue using the oils and grease locally. Feed him less. Tetter is generally an indication of overfeeding. It is probable that his food contains too much fat.

IT'S A GOOD TEST.

Ex-Service Man writes: "Please answer in your columns the following query of an ex-service man:

"1. Will tuberculin injection be positive proof enough to tell whether or not tuberculosis exists? 2. Will it have any bad after effects? 3. Is there any danger of a man who has not tuberculosis getting it through those injections?"

REPLY.

1. It is positive proof of the presence of tuberculosis, but not of its activity.

"2. 3. No."

WEEKLY SERVICE.

Chicago, April 10.—[Friend of the People.]—The alley between Sixtieth place and Sixty-first street is in an awful condition. Refuse is thrown into the alley and it blows all over the neighborhood. Piles of ashes and broken glass are also much in evidence. We should like to have it cleaned up. J. R. M.

The alley has been getting weekly service. It was cleaned April 4.

BETTER STICK AROUND.

La Salle, Ill., April 12.—[Friend of the Soldier.]—I see where the Illinois state bonus bill is about to be passed. Can you tell me if there is any clause in that bill that would prevent a man from collecting the bonus if he is not a resident of the state at the time it is passed? I am contemplating going to Canada and would like to know this. A. K.

We do not know, and cannot tell until the passage of the bill. The only state making such a provision as you mention is New York. If at all feasible it would probably be advisable for you to continue residence in this state until you know the tenor of the bill.

SUBLETTING STORE.

Chicago, April 12.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—I have a lease on a store for one year to occupy as a hat store only. If I wish to sublet it for a different purpose must I have the consent of the landlord? And if I want to sell the lease for different business, must I have the consent of the landlord? B. F.

We could not advise unless the wording of the lease were before us. Either case depends entirely on how the lease is worded.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

SEVENTY-SECOND STREET ALLEY.

Chicago, April 12.—[Friend of the People.]—There used to be an ordinance forbidding people to throw cans and bottles into the streets and alleys. The tenants in the flat back of us on Seventy-second street are continually using the alley as a dump. The other people around here keep the alley in good condition, all except this one person. Can we please have something done? A.

The alley has been cleaned and the offending party notified to stop dumping in the alley.

THOMAS H. BYRNE.
Superintendent of Streets.

TWELVE YEAR LEASE.

Chicago, April 13.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—For twelve years I have had a May lease. No thirty or sixty day notice clause in them, but have always been given a sixty day notice until this year. Have not been proffered a lease to sign for 1921 or notice to move. The middle of March the collection agent of firm verbally stated our rent for the ensuing year would be increased from $55 to $70 and took note of the decorating wanted.

Will this situation automatically renew our lease for another year, and at what price, $55 or $70? R. E. M.

Not unless an agreement is signed or the landlord accepts the rent after May 1.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

AN EARLY BIRD.

Chicago, April 13.—[Friend of the Soldier.]—Can you please tell me if I am entitled to the Michigan state bonus? I enlisted in Chicago in June, 1918, giving my home as Michigan. H. T. D.

Bonus awards depend on so many requirements that we would not attempt to decide questions about eligibility for the bonus. Suggest you refer your inquiry to the adjutant general at Lansing, Michigan.

REBELLIOUS TENANT.

Chicago, April 13.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—1. Just what day of the month is the latest a tenant can stay without paying rent, so that I can save a five day notice? And if they don't move after I have served the notice, what can I do? H. P.

Usually the first day of the month. Depends on the agreement. If they do not move, employ an attorney.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

A CHANCE TO BECOME A "RENT HOG."

Chicago, April 11.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—In last Sunday's TRIBUNE I saw three pages of flat buildings advertised for sale, some of which could be had at four times the yearly rental. Here is a grand chance for some of the yelling tenants to become "profiteers." Why don't they jump at this wonderful opportunity and become a "rent hog"? The reason is that 95 per cent of the apartment buildings are unprofitable.

There is no doubt that certain owners are unfair and are profiteering, but from investigation I conclude that 95 per cent of the profiteering clamor is unjustifiable. Some unscrupulous tenants whose two and three year leases expire now are seeking protection under the Kessinger bill to remain six months more because they cannot understand, or do not want to understand, that taxes and operating costs have increased 150 per cent and even 200 per cent.

Now, if this Kessinger bill becomes law, and a man's house is declared a public utility, it only seems equitable that the owners should be granted a fair return, say 6 per cent, when the "deadbeat" tenants begin to move and leave vacant flats. This bill, it seems to me, is not only a gross injustice to many owners who are trying to do the fair thing, but it is a violation of the fundamental rights of private property.

N. G. CARSON.

THE EVILS OF COSTLY TRANSPORTATION.

Paducah, Ky., April 12.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—A great railway out of Chicago is filling the county papers of Illinois with propaganda, false in detail and malicious in intent, hoping to excuse their robbing rates on fares and freights, by stating that their passenger fares were raised but 45 per cent. This is a false statement, as the Illinois passenger rate was .02 per mile before Wilsonism and McAdooism and Voodooism seized the roads; then it went to 03.8 per mile, its present rate, which is a 90 per cent increase. He also justifies a 90 per cent increase in freight rate, claiming it is just and should stimulate trade.

Advices from Texas say that for the first time in history men who ship cabbage, potatoes, and other vegetables must make a certified bond to the railways, guaranteeing the freight in case the vegetables do not pay the freight when they reach market. Ten thousand cars of cabbage are now rotting in the south on this account. Last week your Iowa City correspondent says a car of hay sold in Chicago for $9.50 less than freight. Chicago building is dead today on account of the freight charges, which are twice the original cost of the lumber. Hard roads and trucks will soon solve the railway problem. Speed the day. C. J. FOSTER.

TO REDUCE RAILROAD LOSSES.

Bellwood, Ill., April 11.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—We have two towns in Wisconsin on two different branches of the C. & N. W. railway, i. e., Phelps and Philips. I was in Phelps a year ago for about three months on business and while there mail and shipments forwarded to me went astray. I was informed by local business men in Phelps that it was of common occurrence for shipments billed to Phelps to go astray, even in some instances in carload lots, and was also informed that the same conditions exist in Philips, Wis., all due to the resemblance of names of Phelps and Philips.

The American Can company about a year ago waybilled a carload out of Bellwood to a town in Alabama. It was found two days later that a mistake had been made in the billing of the car and that the carload was intended for a town of the same name in Michigan. This car had already rolled over 800 miles before it was turned and headed to its proper destination.

The writer in his time has handled thousands of waybills and could mention many other false shipments too numerous to mention.

Such mistakes to a large extent are chargeable to shippers and consignors, but in 75 per cent of cases common carriers turn up as the goat in paying for the mistakes in damages and claims, saying nothing of the cost of clerical service and rehandling miscarried shipments and mail.

If directors of common carriers and commercial industries will lay out the map of the United States before them they will find in many places as high as ten towns with one and the same name, and hundreds of towns with names similar in pronunciation. If 50 per cent of the daily mistakes made due to condition as pointed out could be safeguarded against by legislation, it would have a tendency of elevating efficiency of operation to a higher plane and standard, and prevent the loss of many dollars.

I will suggest, as a railroad man speaking from experience, that the executive heads of common carriers and commercial institutions file a petition with congress praying that they pass a bill to bring about changes so that there would be no two towns in the United States with the same name, and in a manner so that very few towns would be similar in pronunciation.

CHAS. J. MOSHER.

A VARIATION OF THE CHLORINE COMPLAINT.

Chicago, April 12.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—I read in your paper a proclamation issued by Gov. Small calling upon all the residents of every city within our state to participate in cleaning up for the promotion of health. Very well. But how is it about our city water? In the building where we live large, rotten fishes have twice clogged up the water pipes so that the tenants could not get any water for days until a plumber was called to open up the pipes and draw the fishes out. After the first fish was found I called up the city health department, but I was scorned by the man who answered the phone. The only answer I got was: "Don't you know that we get our water from Lake Michigan?" I think, therefore, that the cleanup ought to start with our city health department.

J. D. N.

WE WILL NOT SUE; WE WILL DECLARE, "WITH THE QUALIFICATIONS NECESSARY TO PROTECT ALL AMERICAN RIGHTS."

Chicago, April 13.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—What is the heroic "Peace by resolution" we are hearing so much about? In view of the fact that we were quite successful during the active campaign, and forced a cessation of hostilities by victories on the field, it seems very strange that we should be the ones to resolve to quit.

If we must have peace at once, would it not be more in keeping with our past traditions to present our terms to Germany and demand her acceptance thus to give the world the spectacle of the United States suing for peace?

Our army of occupation would be a most excellent medium for the transmission of our wishes in this matter, and I doubt not that when the Hun leaders contemplated the eager attitude of our boys on the Rhine, the much desired peace would become an immediate reality.

Let us hope that the immortal lines: "We are the dead. . . . To you from falling hands we throw the torch; Be yours to hold it high. . . . If ye break faith with us who die, We shall not sleep, the poppies blow, in Flanders fields," are not wholly forgotten.

POEMS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

PSALM XIX.

The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handiwork.

Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge.

There is no speech or language, where their voice is not heard.

Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun,

Which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race.

His going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it; and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.

The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.

The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes.

The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring forever; the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.

More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold; sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb.

Moreover, by them is thy servant warned: and in keeping of them there is great reward.

Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults.

Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me: then shall I be upright, and I shall be innocent from the great transgression.

Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer.

CLARE SHERIDAN'S Diary, "Mayfair to Moscow." You start it with a supercilious feeling about the state of the world when all that a book needs to make it—p-s-s-st, bang, just like that—a best seller, is that it be written by a lady with a title or a past, when diplomats and artists and magicians and prima donnas are the only successful authors, and mere authors gather the chips of popular fancy that are left after the "prominent people" have taken all the logs.

And you say to yourself, "I'm not going to like this stuff. It's going to be all Clare Sheridan and how successful she is with all the men she meets. She smiles at 'em and they're done for. Vamp, vamp, vamp, the boys are marching, marching straight into their graves." She's so sure of power, you say. And she's sort of maudlinly sentimental about being proud she's no longer a member of the idle rich. It sounds like a pose. You don't like her, and that's an end of it.

But somehow you keep on, because you're interested in what she found in Russia. And when you've finished, you have revised your notion entirely of Clare Sheridan. You have found a woman who did her work under difficult conditions, who never grumbled, who was honest in her enthusiasms, and who, strangely, can mold words as she does her clay, not always with power, or beauty or even distinction, but sometimes with a rare felicity. She can describe a man's face so that you can see it as plainly—and with that same quality of interpretation—as you could see it in a sculpture.

Most of the thousands of readers who buy Clare Sheridan's Dairy, however, aren't interested in Clare Sheridan or her literary possibilities. They want to know what she found in Russia. For information about Russia she is as reliable as any beautiful woman who is doing her self-chosen task with success. Clare Sheridan was a sculptor intent upon the modeling of the heads of a few men. Those heads were fascinating to her because they were the shell of a comparatively new idea in the world. She was interested in the shell, not in the idea. Her contact with the idea was always through some person. She made no investigations—that wasn't her mission. Therefore, her reactions to the communist régime were purely personal and not in any way interpretive.

She asked few questions, and always did what she was told. She was the guest of the soviet government as an artist, and she made no attempt to become an economic or political investigator. That she felt a peace which had never before been in her life and that she loved the ideals if not the actual practices of the communist rule is an interesting—but not internationally important—criticism of Russia's struggle.

She writes a moving page about the burial of John Reed, with the flower-covered coffin (the flowers made of tin, painted, made to do for each revolutionary funeral) and the burying ground a great mossy bank with no memorials, no headstones, an equality unattainable in life, realizable only in death. She tells of the endless speeches and of the utter disregard of the mob for the widow, in a dead faint, lying back on the supporting arm of a foreign office official so interested in the speaking that he did not take her away.

She tells also an amusing thing about Washington Vanderlip. The only thing the government had not requisitioned was a large collection of birds of paradise. Mr. Vanderlip bought so many of them and wrote so many checks that the soviet bank could not find notes enough to honor the rubles. Rumor had it that he would have to wait three weeks until they printed more notes.

There is an episode in the diary which gave one of my correspondents the opportunity to make a bon mot about life and books. The Dilke scandal (which I never heard of before) and the unswerving devotion of the scandalee's wife reminded him—my correspondent—somewhat of "Jenny Essenden" which he had just finished and which he enjoyed thoroughly. "The Dilke episode proves that Anthony Pryde didn't have to depend entirely upon his imagination for his facts or substance. English life can always be depended upon to discount English fiction." Nice phrase that. We'd like to annex it as our own. "Life can always be depended upon to discount fiction." As Whistler said to Oscar Wilde when Wilde had just remarked apropos of a something Whistler had just said, "I wish I'd said that," "You will."

For those who wait, begging alms, for a new book of Coningsby Dawson's, there are two. "It Might Have Happened to You" is the result of a two months' tour of eastern and central Europe and is a journalistic moving picture of what peace has done to Europe. The other one is a novel whose name is "The Kingdom Round the Corner" and whose story you wouldn't want to have spoiled by being told about it.

Do you remember "The Cross-Pull," that thrilling dog story? Hal G. Evarts has written another animal novel. It's called "The Yellow Horde" and is a dramatic story of a coyote. It has nothing whatever to do with the Japanese menace.

The Yale University Press, which has just published a book called "Studies in Honor of Maurice Bloomfield" by a group of his pupils, sent notices to his former scholars in all parts of the world. One of them went to a professor in Budapest, who answered, "I cannot allow myself the pleasure of ordering this interesting and precious volume, whose price of six dollars means in our money 1,500-2,000 crowns, that is to say, half of my annual salary." And we complain about the price of books.

Louis Untermeyer and Jean Starr Untermeyer, his wife, are now members of what some call "Chicago's exclusive literary group," not, worse luck, because they have come to our town to live but because they're separately such jolly souls and jointly such a proof that married poets—even when they're married to each other—lose none of their charm that they have been completely adopted by Chicago. I'd like to say something awfully nice about both of them, but all of the best and most fitting adjectives have already been used up by those of us who met them as strangers and left them as friends. Louis Untermeyer is everything that a poet-critic isn't expected to be. He's a good business man—though it doesn't show. He wears his hair neatly barbered, with the exception of a spot which nature has labeled as her own. He talks as casually about the famous Steinway seventies, Raeburn, British politics, Manet, gefuilte fisch, and Pamela Bianco as he does about verse, free and otherwise. He dashes off a few orthodox chords on the piano and suddenly crashes into a sequence of sounds that Strawinsky would envy. If the law making it a hanging offense to make puns is passed by congress this year (obbying has been done, and successfully, for its immediate adoption) Louis Untermeyer and B. W. Huebsch, the publisher, will hang together, and the world will lose two of its (otherwise) most charming citizens. Jean Starr Untermeyer is a poet and a person in her own right, a modern and thoroughly successful mother, and a cook whose fame may be her fortune if she ever gets tired writing poetry.

The Arnold Daly book has finally arrived. "The Dominant Male," it is called, after a playlet which is the first thing in the volume. There are those who think Arnold Daly can write. I am not among them.

"Original Sinners" is a collection of eight short stories by H. W. Nevinson, who is famous in England, not only as a great journalist, but for his active interest in public affairs. And he is, unless I am mistaken, father of the cubistic Nevinson. These short stories are not for the many. They are too good. But for the few who like a sophisticated, satirical tale told with suavity, "Original Sinners" is a prize packet. "Pongo's Illusion," the story of a chimpanzee "civilized" by a yellow white man, is at the same time a tale of horror and a brilliant satire on so-called civilization.

"Chief Contemporary Dramatists, Second Series," by Thomas H. Dickinson, is now available for those who hunger and thirst for the plays of today. Dr. Dickinson has done a sincere service by making available the complete texts of popular plays. The First Series is invaluable for reference and pleasure—and the Second Series is its worthy companion. The new volume contains the complete text of eighteen plays, among them "Abraham Lincoln," by John Drinkwater; "Milestones," by Arnold Bennett and Edward Knoblock; that brilliant "Our Betters," by Somerset Maugham; "The Yellow Jacket," by George C. Hazelton and Benrimo (one of the most unusual and charming plays ever produced); "The Piper," by Josephine Preston Peabody; "Mixed Marriage," by St. John Ervine, and ten of the foreign adaptations like "The Concert" and "Cyrano de Bergerac." Dr. Dickinson's two volumes may well be accepted as a definite anthology of present day drama. The absence of Barrie and Shaw is the result of the rigid copyrights which they each hold. Mr. Shaw was willing to be included if he could have for himself a royalty of $1 on each book sold.

AT the SIGN of the WORLD'S END by G.K. Chesterton

ON DOLLARS AND DAY DREAMS.

[Copyright: 1921: By The Chicago Tribune.]

THE fact without the truth is futile; indeed, the fact without the truth is false. I have already noted that this is especially true touching our observations of a strange country; and it is certainly true touching one small fact which has swelled into a large fable.

I mean the fable about America commonly summed up in the phrase about the Almighty Dollar. I do not think the dollar is almighty in America; I fancy many things are mightier, including many ideals and some rather insane ideals. But I think it might be maintained that the dollar has another of the attributes of deity. If it is not omnipotent, it is in a sense omnipresent.

Whatever Americans think about dollars, it is, I think, relatively true that they talk about dollars. If a mere mechanical record could be taken by the modern machinery of dictaphones and stenography I do not think it probable that the mere word "dollars" would occur more often in any given number of American conversations than the mere word "pounds" or "shillings" in a similar number of English conversations.

G. K. CHESTERTON.

And these statistics, like nearly all statistics, would be utterly useless and even fundamentally false. It is as if we should calculate that the word "elephant" had been mentioned a certain number of times in a particular London street, or so many times more often than the word "thunderbolt" had been used in Stoke Poges.

Doubtless there are statisticians capable of carefully collecting these statistics also; and doubtless there are scientific social reformers capable of legislating on the basis of them. They would probably argue from the elephantine imagery of the London street that such and such a percentage of the householders were megalomaniacs and required medical care and police coercion. And doubtless their calculations, like nearly all such calculations, would leave out the only important point; as that the street was in the immediate neighborhood of the zoo, or was yet more happily situated under the benignant shadow of the Elephant and Castle.

And in the same way the mechanical calculation about the mention of dollars is entirely useless unless we have some moral understanding of why they are mentioned. It certainly does not mean merely a love of money; and if it did, a love of money may mean a great many very different and even contrary things.

American Talks of Work; Englishman of Holidays.

THE love of money is very different in a peasant or in a pirate, in a miser or in a gambler, in a great financier or in a man doing some practical and productive work. Now this difference in the conversation of American and English business men arises, I think, from certain much deeper things in the American which are not generally understood by the Englishman. It also arises from much deeper things in the Englishman, of which the Englishman is even more ignorant.

To begin with, I fancy that the American, quite apart from any love of money, has a great love of measurement. He will mention the exact size or weight of things in a way which appears to us as irrelevant. It is as if we were to say that a man came to see us carrying three feet of walking stick and four inches of cigar. It is so in cases that have no possible connection with any avarice or greed for gain.

An American will praise the prodigal generosity of some other man in giving up his own estate for the good of the poor. But he will generally say that the philanthropist gave them a 200 acre park, where an Englishman would think it quite sufficient to say that he gave them a park.

There is something about this precision which seems suitable to the American atmosphere; to the hard sunlight, and the cloudless skies, and the glittering detail of the architecture and the landscape; just as the vaguer English version is consonant to our mistier and more impressionist scenery. It is also connected, perhaps, with something more boyish about the younger civilization; and corresponds to the passionate particularity with which a boy will distinguish the uniforms of regiments, the rigs of ships, or even the colors of tram tickets. It is a certain godlike appetite for things, as distinct from thoughts.

But there is also, of course, a much deeper cause of the difference; and it can easily be deduced by noting the real nature of the difference itself. When two business men in a train are talking about dollars, I am not so foolish as to expect them to be talking about the philosophy of St. Thomas Aquinas. But if they were two English business men, I should not expect them to be talking about business. Probably it would be about some sport; and most probably some sport in which they themselves never dreamed of indulging. The approximate difference is that the American talks about his work and the Englishman about his holidays. His ideal is not labor, but leisure.

The American Respect for Work.

LIKE every other national characteristic, this is not primarily a point for praise or blame; in essence it involves neither, and in effect it involves both. It is certainly connected with that snobbishness which is the great sin of English society. The Englishman does love to conceive himself as a sort of country gentleman; and his castles in the air are all castles in Scotland rather than in Spain. For, as an ideal, a Scotch castle is as English as a Welsh rarebit or an Irish stew.

And, if he talks less about money, I fear it is sometimes because in one sense he thinks more of it. Money is a mystery in the old and literal sense of something too sacred for speech. Gold is a god; and, like the god of some agnostics, has no name, and is worshiped only in his work. It is true that the English gentleman wishes to have enough money to be able to forget it. But it may be questioned whether he does entirely forget it.

As against this weakness, the American has succeeded, at the price of a great deal of crudity and clatter, in making general a very real respect for work. He has partly disenchanted the dangerous glamour of the gentleman, and in that sense has achieved some degree of democracy; which is the most difficult achievement in the world.

On the other hand, there is a good side to the Englishman's day dream of leisure, and one which the American spirit tends to miss. It may be expressed in the word "holiday," or, still better, in the word "hobby." The Englishman, in his character of Robin Hood, really has got two strings to his bow. Indeed, the Englishman really is well represented by Robin Hood; for there is always something about him that may literally be called outlawed, in the sense of being extra-legal or outside the rules. A Frenchman said of Browning that his center was not in the middle; and it may be said of many an Englishman that his heart is not where his treasure is. Browning expressed a very English sentiment when he said:

> I like to know a butcher paints,
> A baker rhymes for his pursuit:
> Candlestick maker much acquaints
> His soul's song, or, haply mute,
> Blows out his brains upon the flute.

Stevenson touched on the same insular sentiment when he said that many men he knew, who were meat salesmen to the outward eye, might in the life of contemplation sit with the saints.

National Traits and Interests.

NOW the extraordinary achievement of the American meat salesman is that his poetic enthusiasm can really be for meat sales; not for money but for meat. An American commercial traveler asked me, with a religious fire in his eyes, whether I did not think that salesmanship could be an art.

In England there are many salesmen who are sincerely fond of art; but seldom of the art of salesmanship. Art is with them a hobby; a thing of leisure and liberty. That is why the English traveler talks, if not of art, then of sport. That is why the two city men in the London train, if they are not talking about golf, may be talking about gardening. If they are not talking about dollars, or the equivalent of dollars, the reason lies much deeper than any superficial praise or blame touching the desire for wealth. In the English case, at least, it lies very deep in the English spirit.

Many of the greatest English things have had this lighter and looser character of a hobby or a holiday experiment. Even a masterpiece has often been a by-product. The works of Shakespeare come out so casually that they can be attributed to the most improbable people; even to Bacon. The sonnets of Shakespeare are picked up afterwards as if out of a waste paper basket. The immortality of Dr. Johnson does not rest on the written leaves he collected but entirely on the words he wasted, the words he scattered to the winds.

So great a thing as Pickwick is almost a kind of accident; it began as something secondary and grew into something primary and preeminent. It began with mere words written to illustrate somebody else's picture; and swelled like an epic expanded from an epigram. It might almost be said that in the case of Pickwick the author began as the servant of the artist. But, as in the same story of Pickwick, the servant became greater than the master.

This incalculable and accidental quality, like all national qualities, has its strength and weakness, but it does represent a certain reserve fund of interests in the Englishman's life; and distinguishes him from the other extreme type, of the millionaire who works till he drops, or who drops because he stops working.

It is the great achievement of American civilization that in that country it really is not cant to talk about the dignity of labor. There is something that might almost be called the sanctity of labor; but it is subject to the profound law that when anything less than the highest becomes a sanctity, it tends also to become a superstition. When the candlestick maker does not blow out his brains upon the flute, there is always a danger that he may blow them out somewhere else, owing to depressing conditions in the candlestick market.

Next week Mr. Chesterton will write about "Making Friends for England."

THREE DAY BRIDE OF "NAVAL HERO" GETS $800 BALM

Oak Park Wife Divorces 'Lieut.' Glen Aldrich.

Glen T. Aldrich, the jolly "lieutenant naval commander," who traveled from coast to coast in the fall of 1920, leaving a trail of forged checks and broken hearts, lost one of his wives yesterday.

MRS. LILLIAN DOMBROW ALDRICH

Mrs. Lillian Dombrow Aldrich of Oak Park was granted a divorce, and, although his bride for only three days, received $800 alimony.

Aldrich appeared in social circles here shortly after the war. Arriving from Washington, where he had been commissioned "lieutenant commander," he set society awhirl with tales of bloodthirsty sea battles and a conspicuous display of war medals. He married Miss Dombrow after a short courtship.

Bride Hears of His Arrest.

Three days later the young bride woke up to find herself without a husband. After weeks of waiting she learned he had been arrested in Portland, Ore., on charges of forging $4,000 worth of government checks.

GLEN T. ALDRICH. [Melvin H. Sykes Photo.]

Then Glen's troubles piled up fast. Another wife—Mrs. Esther Carlson Aldrich of Austin — popped up and announced she had married him five weeks before Miss Dombrow. Government sleuths stripped him of his naval glories. He was brought to Chicago.

He Blames Chicago Booze.

"The liquor got me," he explained. "It made me plumb drunk all the time I was in Chicago. Don't remember any weddings."

Subsequently he was released on the bigamy charge when his "wives" refused to prosecute. Miss Dombrow in her bill charged her husband with misconduct and named a Portland [Ore.] woman.

War Veterans to Hold Reunion and Carnival

Fifty posts of the American Legion, veterans foreign wars and Spanish war veterans, have joined forces for a reunion and carnival of former service men and women to be held in the Coliseum May 3 and 4. The reunion will take the form of a combination circus, country fair, mardi gras, and dance. Each post is taking concessions, the proceeds to be divided between the post and the Legionnaires' club, which is running the show for the benefit of employment, hospitalization, and other work among soldiers, sailors, marines, and nurses.

Three $100 Bills, Stolen, Put Mrs. Annie Bad in Bad

Mrs. Annie Bad was held to the grand jury in $5,000 bonds yesterday because three $100 bills which W. A. Fuston missed after four gypsies had told his fortune in his garage at 6315 Vernon avenue were found in her possession. Her companions were freed.

ONLY AS OLD AS THEY FEEL

When news reached the Scottish Old People's home at Riverside yesterday that all the inmates were to be taken to the Hislop concert at the Auditorium theater tomorrow there was a celebration. "Granny" Janet Crawford, 90 years old, danced a Highland fling with "Gran'pop" Andrew Reid, two years her senior; and David Bruce, 80-odd and one of the youngsters at the home, played an air on his ancient violin. The concert is to be given for the benefit of the home.

Withdraw U. S. Naval Forces from Adriatic

Washington, D. C., April 16.—Withdrawal of American naval forces from the Adriatic, where the United States has maintained a small naval force since the war, was announced today by Secretary Denby. The cruisers Chattanooga and Olympia will return to be assigned to one of the major divisions of the fleet. Destroyer Division 35 will go to the Asiatic fleet.

ASK COMMERCE AND SAVINGS BANK RECEIVER

Another chapter in the uncertain career of the Bank of Commerce and Savings was written yesterday afternoon, when a bill asking that a receiver be appointed for the institution was filed in Circuit court.

WM. M. GRISSON.

The affairs of the bank have been in an unsettled state since June 21, 1917, and it has been in process of liquidation since June 1, 1920. Its business has been in the hands of the People's Trust and Savings bank for nearly four years. The bank's most serious difficulty came after its cashier and vice president, William Mannon Grisson, looted it of between $100,000 and $200,000.

The bill asking dissolution of the Bank of Commerce and Savings and a final accounting of its affairs was presented before Judge Oscar Torrison by Assistant Attorney General William Lister. It urged that J. Milton Trainer be appointed receiver. It was filed in the name of Andrew J. Russel auditor of public accounts and state bank examiner.

At this time Frank H. Elmore was president of the institution, with the following directors: Charles R. Brown, Frederick L. Brown, Mr. Elmore, Wallace G. Clark, William C. Hollister, E. G. Munsell, E. R. Rockwell, E. W. Spicer, J. Milton Trainer, and J. W. Shedd.

The bill asking receivership gives the bank's liabilities at $196,000; it says the assets are not known, excepting that $100,000 worth of the total is believed to be valueless.

CHAUFFEUR TELLS A NEW ONE.

C. Armstorng, chauffeur for Louis A. Hippach, a broker living at 2808 Sheridan road, Evanston, was fined $10 yesterday for parking at Chicago avenue and Davis street. He said he had stopped to quiet a Belgian police dog which seemed about to leap from the car.

WEDDED 50 YEARS, THEY PLAN FOR 75TH JUBILEE

Fifty years ago yesterday Frederick W. Juhnke married Wilhelmina Busse, who came from Germany to keep a promise made in 1867. Last night at their home, 2433 Aubert avenue, these Chicago pioneers celebrated the golden anniversary of their wedding. Mr. Juhnke is 79, and his wife 74.

Both are remarkably young for their years, and both declare they are equal to another half century together. They discussed plans for their diamond anniversary at yesterday's celebration.

Mr. and Mrs. Juhnke have five children, Mrs. Minnie Hovagaard, Otto Juhnke, Herman Juhnke, Mrs. Augusta Friese, and Miss Ida Juhnke, and three grandchildren, Roger, Phyllis, and Julia Friese.

ILL, WOMAN DIES OF GAS.

Mrs. Emma Wittmyer, 38, 3312 North Claremont avenue, was found asphyxiated in her bathroom yesterday. Charles Ledger, the landlord, said she had been ill for several years and had been despondent.

PULP AND PAPER LIKELY TO STAY ON FREE LIST

Most of Imports Come from Canada.

Washington, D. C., April 16.—[Special.]—Newsprint and wood pulp seem certain to remain on the free list in the new tariff law. Forty per cent of the newsprint used in the United States is being brought from Canada and a considerable portion of the wood pulp used in this country also comes from Canada.

The Underwood act, as passed in 1913, provided that printing paper suitable for the printing of books or newspapers, but not for covers or bindings, valued above 2½ cents per pound should bear a duty of 12 per cent ad valorem, all such paper below that valuation being admitted free. In 1916 the valuation of paper which could be imported free of duty was increased to 5 cents per pond, and in April, 1920, to 8 cents, the purpose being to keep this amount above the market value of newsprint paper. Under the present law this valuation will drop to 5 cents in May, 1922.

The present law also includes a provision for an increase in duty by the administration of any export duty, export license fee, or any other charge upon printing paper, wood pulp, or wood used in the manufacture of paper, imposed by any country from which such paper may be imported.

Ask Duty on Foreign Paper.

The newsprint manufacturers of the United States do not oppose the request of newspaper publishers that the newsprint should continue to come in free of duty from Canada. The manufacturers, however, have asked for a duty of three-fourths of 1 cent per pound, or $15 a ton, on newsprint imported from Germany, Sweden, Norway, and Finland. The manufacturers would like a duty of this amount to be provided in the law with a provision that it should not apply against imports from Canada, except by executive order, whenever it might be shown that Canadian provinces are maintaining or imposing unfair restrictions. The newspaper publishers object to a duty of any kind.

In support of their request for a duty on imports from Europe, the newsprint manufacturers contend that they are at a competitive disadvantage with the manufacturers of Germany, Sweden, Norway, and Finland, on account of the artificial condition created by the rate of exchange. They also insist that they are at a disadvantage with Canadian manufacturers who derive pulp wood and power from low priced leases from provincal governments and are otherwise able to operate with lower costs.

Cost of Production.

With reference to differences in cost of production the manufacturers refer to a report of the tariff board in 1911 to the effect that it cost at that time $5.35 more to manufacture a ton of newsprint in the United States than in Canada, and to a report of the federal trade commission in 1917 that it cost from $4 to $5 less per ton in Canada than in this country. On the basis of present costs the manufacturers claim that it costs $15 per ton more in the United States than in Canada, principally on account of the difference in the cost of pulp wood and the charges from overhead. It is on the basis of this figure that the request has been made for a duty of $15 a ton.

There are in operation in the United States 322 pulp mills, of which 176 manufacture chemically ground wood and 146 unbleached and bleached chemical pulp. Only fifteen of the mills manufatcure pulp solely for sale, the other mils producing it for their own requirements, offering to the trade such surplus quantities as they have from time to time.

As against the fifteen pulp mills manufacturing chemical pulp exclusively for the trade there are approximately 600 paper mills in the United States which do not produce the chemical pulp and are obliged to buy it in the open market. There is a shortage of from 7 to 45 per cent in the domestic supply.

A Car of Specialists

You may have the best motor in the world in your car, or the best transmission, or the best axles, or the best any other one feature, but unless every unit is one of proved reliability your car is like a chain with a weak link.

The unprecedented success of Moon cars is due to the fact that every feature both of engineering and coach work has the intrinsic worth, excellence and demonstrated quality. Count them over—Continental Red Seal Motor; Delco Starter and Ignition; Timken Axles; Spicer Universal Joints; Brown-Lipe Transmission; Borg & Beck Clutch; Rayfield Carburetor; Exide Battery; Fedders Radiator—Nickel-Silver; Warner Steering Gear.

Each represents the product of specialists trained for years to make the very best in their particular line. For forty-one years the Moon organization has specialized in coach building.

Moon engineers have thus combined the skill of the world in this wonderful car, which is backed by a factory record of sixteen years in the production of quality. Quality in its entirety and not in one or two spots is the outstanding feature of Moon cars—quality through and through.

PAIGE

The Most Beautiful Car in America

Master of the Highway

The owner of a Paige 6-66 model is, indeed, Master of the Highway.

He drives with the serene confidence and tolerant good nature of the true sportsman.

For his car is the speed marvel of modern times—a car that the sporting world has tested and officially proclaimed champion.

The world's stock car record for speed now belongs to Paige—and Paige alone.

When our "Daytona 6-66" model thundered down the beach at 102.8 miles per hour, it proved itself not only a marvelously fast car, but a superlatively good car.

Only giant strength and endurance could survive such a heroic test.

So these are qualities that you will find in any Paige 6-66.

Because they were fine enough to win a world's championship, it must follow they are fine enough for all amateur demands in years of service.

All this—and more—you can establish for yourself.

We invite you to take one thorough demonstration behind the exclusive 6-66 motor and make a record of the tests.

Then ride in any other car—at any price—and compare the results.

We do not urge you to buy the Paige because of its very great advantage in cost.

We urge you to buy it because—irrespective of cost—it offers all that any man can require in luxurious and strictly modern motoring.

Protect your Ford engine from this abuse

CARRYING you there and back on long, fast trips, doing errands all about town, always on the job—that's your Ford when you treat it fairly.

The Ford has a remarkable engine, compact and finely made. When overheating, excess carbon, pounding bearings tax temper and pocket book, it is nine chances to one that you have been using inferior oil.

Under the intense heat of the engine—200° to 1000° F. —ordinary oil forms great quantities of black sediment. Sediment has no lubricating value. It causes premature wear which will cut the life of your engine in two.

You can eliminate engine trouble from this source. Sediment is reduced 86% when you use Veedol, the lubricant that resists heat. (See the two bottles below.)

Have your engine flushed out to cleanse it of grit, sediment and thickened oil. Put in Veedol. Leading dealers have it in stock. Ask today for a supply of Veedol.

Veedol lubricants for every part of the car

Use Veedol Lubricants for all parts of the car: VEEDOL for the engine; (light zero, medium, heavy, special heavy, extra heavy); for the differential and transmission, VEEDOL TRANS-GEAR OIL or GEAR COMPOUND; for the tractor and truck, WORM DRIVE OIL; GRAPHITE GREASE; CUP GREASE.

DENBY LEASES NAVY OIL LANDS TO STOP DRAINS

Washington, D. C., April 16.—To prevent the drainage of naval oil reserve lands in California by private drilling on the outskirt of the reserves, Secretary Denby has decided to lease drilling rights inside the reserves over a small area to private concerns, he announced today.

Bids for the privilege will be advertised soon, the secretary added. Under the terms of the leases the government will reserve to itself a proportion of all the oil obtained or the equivalent in cash.

Efforts to open up the naval reserves in California for drilling by private companies have been made for a number of years, practically ever since the reserves were created. The matter recently was seriously agitated in congress, but Secretary Daniels stood out strongly against such a move, contending that the navy must have the oil for future use in view of the rapid development of other available oil fields.

The decision to lease parts of the reserves is not regarded as any change in the department's policy, Secretary Denby said, explaining that it was a precautionary measure to protect the navy's supply.

A portion of naval oil reserve No. 1 in Kern county is to be thrown open for private drilling in an effort to end the draining of the government's lands by wells drilled along the borders of the reserve, he said.

Bids for the sinking and operation of twenty-two wells in double rows along the northern and eastern boundaries of the reserve will be received either at San Francisco or the navy department until noon, April 25.

Mr. Denby is acting under authority of the last naval appropriation bill, which gives the secretary of the navy power to operate naval reserve lands in California, either directly or by lease.

TWO SIDES TO "UKE'S" PART, BUT ANYHOW IT'S WEDDING BELLS

Some say the ukelele had a lot to do with it. Others say the ukelele had nothing to do with it; that it happened not because of the uke, but rather in spite of it.

GERTRUDE CHENEY

However that may be, Wilfred Scott, ex-soldier, married Miss Gertrude Cheney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. Cheney of Oak Park, yesterday afternoon.

It is stated that the bridegroom to be never heard a ukelele until Miss Cheney played one for him. Some say this was the beginning of the romance. Others deny it hotly. As for the two involved, they prefer not to discuss the matter. And there you are.

IMMIGRATION AND ARMY AND NAVY BILLS THIS WEEK

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., April 16.—[Special.]—Immigration legislation and the army and navy appropriation bills form the chief features of the house program during the coming week.

The immigration bill will be reported from that committee on Monday and passed by the house on Tuesday, according to present plans. The measure will be in substantially the form in which it was "pocket vetoed" by former President Wilson. It restricts immigration according to a percentage limitation.

Then the army and navy appropriation bills will be taken up, the intention being to pass both before the end of the week. The naval bill will be reported from the appropriations committee just as passed by the last house. The army bill must be reducted somewhat.

The budget bill is not yet ready for consideration, but may be put into shape during the following week. Representative Good, chairman of the special house budget committee, and Senator McCormick, in charge of senate budget legislation, plan to confer with President Harding to learn his wishes as to the form of the bill.

While the house leaders prefer that the budget bureau shall be located in the office of the President and the senate leaders prefer it should be in the treasury department, the disposition is to follow the wishes of the President.

HUGHES STUDIES SANTO DOMINGO ARMY REMOVAL

Washington, D. C., April 16.—Steps for withdrawal of American control over the government of the Dominican republic are under consideration by Secretary Hughes, it was learned today, and President Harding is expected soon to issue a statement on the matter. Plans for the withwdrawal, prepared by direction of President Wilson, it is understood, may be modified somewhat.

Mr. Wilson's purpose to withdraw from Santo Domingo was made known last Dec. 24, the plan for transfer of government mapped out, including the appointment of a commission of Dominicans to confer with an American technical adviser.

This commission has been appointed, but the beginning of work has been deferred until the new administration can complete its study of the Wilson plan.

Harding Wants Own Man to Reorganize Departments

Washington, D. C., April 16.—[Special.]—Anxious for a thorough job of reorganizing the executive departments, President Harding has asked legislation to make possible the appointment of a "civilian" head for the joint committee, and if this is granted the president probably will name Walter F. Brown of Ohio. In the talk of departmental reorganization in the past little definite action has resulted, jealousy cropping up among department heads over proposed changes which would take away power.

Robbed Harding 20 Years Ago; Sends Him the $1

Washington, D. C., April 17.—President Harding today received a dollar, remitted by an unidentified person in Pasadena, Cal., who wrote that it represented an amount of which Mr. Harding was "robbed" twenty years ago.

"About twenty years ago," the letter said, "the writer robbed you of 40 cents' worth of property. Please accept inclosed for amount and interest and let the writer remain unknown."

WOMEN LAUNCH DRIVE TO MAKE BETTER CITIZENS

Washington, D. C., April 16.—[Special.]—The National League of Women Voters announced today that Chicago women have launched a movement to teach citizenship in Illinois.

The league, which is back of the movement, opened the campaign by holding "citizenship breakfasts" to obtain 30,000 new members in Chicago and $30,000.

A school was opened in Chicago to train teachers for instructing in citizenship. By supplying teachers throughout the state the league hopes to standardize the work. The big drive will be made in July.

Business with The NASH Motors Company is Good

We are receiving for April and May more orders for the Nash Six and Nash Four from our distributors and dealers than we will be able to fill, though this month our Kenosha factory is operating 79% normal and our new Milwaukee plant is gaining in production daily.

We are working toward greater production as quickly as possible.

Actual sales and delivery figures from our dealers show that many of them have sold more Nash cars in January, February and March of this year than they did in the corresponding months of last year.

They report better sales each month and each week.

The greater proportion have been Nash Six sales, of course, as we have not been able as yet to produce in our new plant enough Nash Fours to meet orders.

The big volume of Nash Six sales under conditions of the past few months is gratifying. It shows that conditions are improving and it shows most clearly the high regard motor car buyers have for this good car.

The Nash Six is a leader in sales today, and sales leadership now has a far greater meaning than last year.

Then, with countrywide demand for automobiles far in excess of the combined production of all factories, sales leadership meant simply leadership in production.

Now sales leadership means leadership in value. Buyers are purchasing on the basis of value alone. The cars that lead in sales today are the cars in their respective price fields that buyers agree possess the highest value for the money invested.

That is why this is a Nash Six market, and why the Nash Six is today one of the fastest selling motor cars in the country.

The exceptional worth of this car has found general recognition. Buyers have found that the Nash Six qualities of beauty, power and comfort can be approximated only in cars considerably higher in price.

That fact is that the genuine desire for the Dort in Chicago is growing steadily stronger and stronger.

The astonishing loyalty of Dort performance and its hardy ability to "stand up" under rough usage is winning daily new friends.

And now the superlatively beautiful bodies that mark the Dort family, assure a firmer grip upon the preference of Chicago people.

These charming new styles in touring car, roadster, sedan and coupe provide a perfect union of reliable economical performance and delightfully attractive appearance.

BANKS RETURN TO PRE-WAR POWER; INFLATION SAGS

BY O. A. MATHER.

That the credit inflation which accompanied the post-war boom has been canceled and the banking system of the country is rapidly returning to its prewar strength is revealed in the weekly statements of the federal reserve banks. The current improvement reflects the receipt last week of about $25,000,000 in foreign gold and a further reduction on loans, although this was partially offset by a considerable increase in reserves held for private banks.

The reserve percentage of the whole system, however, showed slight increase and now stands at the highest figure since Sept. 6, 1918, when the armistice first came in sight. There was another noteworthy decline of $25,437,000 in federal reserve note circulation, making a total reduction of about $536,000,000 from the maximum of last December.

Gold Reserves Rise Further.

The consolidated statement of the twelve federal reserve banks shows an increase in gold reserves of $22,869,000, but as subsidiary currency receded $19,626,000 total reserves expanded only $3,242,000. Loans receded $50,198,000, those on government obligations and those on commercial paper declining $6,885,000 and $43,363,000, respectively. Bills bought in the market increased $15,975,000, so that total bills declined $34,223,000. Total earning assets receded $33,825,000. The member banks increased their reserve accounts $23,565,000. Total deposits increased $9,627,000 despite a decline in government deposits of $16,936,000.

The ratio of total reserves to net deposit and federal reserve note liabilities combined is 53.7, compared with 53.5 per cent in the preceding week, while the ratio of gold reserves to note circulation, after setting aside 35 per cent against net deposit liabilities, is 65.2 compared with 64.7 per cent.

New York Adds to Gold.

The statement of the New York federal reserve bank shows a gain in gold reserves of $18,069,000, but its ratio of reserves to net deposit and federal reserve note liabilities combined declined to 53.2 from 53.8 per cent in the preceding week as the result of the member banks increasing their reserve accounts $29,649,000. Considering that the gold reserve was augmented in spite of declines in loans and note circulation, the bank's position is distinctly stronger even while it is strengthening the reserve position of its member banks.

Loans declined $5,893,000, those on government obligations expanding $6,854,000, but those on commercial paper receding $12,747,000. Bills bought increased $16,357,000, so that total bills declined $10,463,000. Total earning assets receded $10,398,000. Total deposits expanded $25,395,000. Federal reserve note circulation declined $146,618,000.

Chicago Makes Improvement.

The statement of the Chicago federal reserve bank shows further improvement. Gold reserves expanded $20,907,000 and total reserves expanded $21,336,000. Loans receded $25,553,000; those on government obligations and those on commercial paper declining $3,846,000 and $24,707,000, respectively. Total bills declined $27,901,000 and total earning assets receded $28,375,000. The member banks increased their reserve accounts $3,377,000.

Federal reserve note circulation receded $4,767,000. Total deposits increased $1,361,000, although government deposits declined $2,400,000. The ratio of total reserves to net deposit and federal reserve note liabilities combined rose from 48.7 to 54.6 per cent in the preceding week.

Clearing Banks Show Excess.

The statement of the New York clearing house banks shows a decided and encouraging reversal. Legal reserves expanded $20,769,500, making an excess above requirements of $16,438,180 and so wiping out the deficit of $4,331,320 shown in the preceding week. This improvement was primarily the result of the member banks increasing their reserve account at the federal reserve bank by $22,896,000. Aggregate reserves increased $22,758,000. Loans declined $6,459,000, while net demand and time deposits expanded $14,639,000 and $2,199,000, respectively. Government deposits increased $7,931,000. The figures follow:

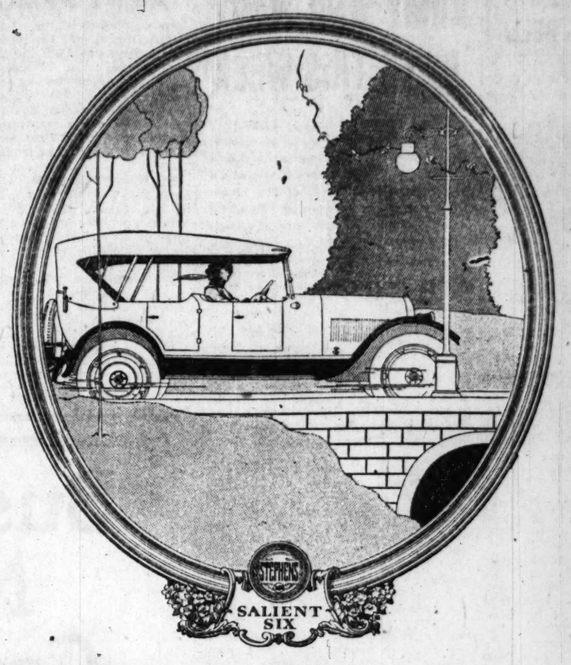
STARTLING TESTIMONIES OF STEPHENS-OWNER : NUMBER ONE



Achieving the Incredible

A CIRCUIT of 11,736 miles, from Chicago to California and return—over weather-torn, rockribbed, impassable roads—through the deep, hot, stubborn sands of four deserts—fording swift rivers, climbing steep mountains, encountering impenetrable forests—carrying a 1,500 pound candy mixing machine in the tonneau, a trip requiring the kind of superhuman courage that comes only by reliance on an infallible motor—this, every single mile of it, without a change of tire or spark plug, is the recently achieved record of a Stephens Owner—Mr. LeRoy Daugherty, Sales Manager, Savage Brothers, Confectioners Machinery, Coppersmiths, Chicago.

LINCOLN
MOTOR CARS

THE qualities of the Lincoln Motor Car are such that if it were produced under the conditions and by the methods employed in building Europe's finer cars, it would be necessary to more than double the Lincoln selling price.

Reversing the method of comparison, Europe's finer cars could be duplicated in quantities in the Lincoln factories, by the Lincoln organization, with Lincoln equipment, by Lincoln methods, and profitably marketed at less than the Lincoln selling price.

And it is not too much to say that Europe's finer cars would be measurably bettered if produced in the Lincoln way.

BAD WEATHER, GOOD BUYING, BULGE GRAINS

BY CHARLES D. MICHAELS.

Bad weather over the grain section, with temperatures down to 20 in parts of Kansas and Nebraska, combined with the passage by the house of the emergency tariff bill, and expectations that it will be passed by the senate, were important factors in the grain markets. A decidedly better feeling existed, and for the first time in several weeks it was difficult to buy grains without bidding up prices.

The markets have been liquidated on a big decline, and an overdue rally was the result. Closing prices were around top, with wheat 2½@5¼c higher, May leading. Corn gained 1⅝@1¾c; oats, 1½@1½, and rye, 3½@6¾c, the latter on May while barley was up 1¾c.

Provisions also felt the effect of the change in sentiment, and lighter offerings improved buying. Prices advanced and closed at the high point, with pork up 70c; lard, 37½@40c, and short ribs, 47½@52½c for the day.

It has been a week of liquidation, with the lowest prices in recent years for all grains. The close was with a better feeling and net losses were: Wheat, 3¢; corn, 2¼@3½c; oats, ⅝@7⅛c; rye, 3½@7¾c, the latter on May; barley, 1¼c; pork, 100@35c; lard unchanged, and short ribs 7½c lower to unchanged as compared with a week ago.

Good Buying of May Wheat.

Wheat traders changed their attitude toward the market, owing to the favorable action on the tariff bill, making it impossible to bring Canadian wheat into the United States except at 40c duty. This is expected to create competition for American wheat between the big Minneapolis millers and exporters, the latter being heavily short cash wheat on sales for forward shipment. Minneapolis millers were good buyers of cash and May wheat in their market during the day. The strong point made was that the tariff bill is likely to become a law within a few days.

While the cold weather may not seriously damage a large percentage of the winter wheat, it will not help it, and the statement of the Modern Miller in its last report that frozen wheat was not responding to growing weather was freely commented on. There is too much rain in some sections, especially around St. Louis. Another factor was that commodities have been on the decline for forty-nine weeks, according to Dun's Review, and a rally was due.

Selling pressure was greatly reduced and heavy buying of May wheat by leading elevator interests, with export bids here, tended to create a better feeling. Cash business in all lines, however, was interrupted by poor telegraphic service. There were sales of No. 1 Manitobas, f. o. b. Toledo, to mills at 40c over May.

Corn Price Up Sharply.

Corn was not easy to buy and a general covering movement by shorts carried prices up sharply. Pressure was light from sellers and with bad weather, which will delay farm work and receipts, coupled with a better export demand and give-ups on 400,000 bu made for the seaboard, the feeling was more friendly.

The feature of the trading in oats was covering by shorts, due to the advance in other grains and the unfavorable weather conditions, creating fears of damage to the crop. A new factor appeared in the purchase of 160,000 bu No. 2 white c. i. f. Buffalo for export.

A wild market on in rye, with shorts covering, boosting the May price nearly 7c from Friday's close.

Provisions were bought by packers and shorts. Export business was better and sales of fat backs and lard was made. Shipments of lard and meats fell off nearly 3,000,000 lbs for the week. Prices follow:

CASH·GRAIN NEWS

With the exception of 40,000 bu of Manitobas, no sales of wheat for export were confirmed at the seaboard. Crippled wire service was a factor in checking the demand as was the advance in futures. There was some inquiry for hard winters via the gulf for May shipment at around 22½c over the future.

Chicago handlers sold 200,000 bu corn to exporters and 400,000 bu May were given up in exchange for the cash article here. The trade had reports of 1,000,000 bu in all positions. Charters were made for 225,000 bu corn to Montreal. A sale of 160,000 bu No. 2 white oats was made at better than 3¼c over May c. i. f. Buffalo. Domestic shipping sales were 25,000 bu wheat, 25,000 bu corn and 35,000 bu oats.

Premiums on cash wheat here and in other markets showed little change, although prices were higher with futures. Local receipts, 14 cars. St. Louis reported an active demand with prices 3@7c higher and Kansas City up 1@5c.

Wet weather hampered the inspection of grain at all of the leading western points. Offerings of corn were small, and prices here 1@1½c higher, with the basis unchanged. No. 3 mixed being 2¼@3c and No. 3 yellow 1@1¾c under May. Receipts, 33 cars. Outside markets were 1@3c higher.

Demand for cash oats was good, with sample values 1@1¼c higher. No. 2 white here sold at 1@1½c over May. Receipts, 48 cars. Cash grain prices in leading markets follow:

METAL MARKETS.

NEW YORK, April 16.—COPPER—Steadily maintained; leading producers were quoting from 12¾c to 13c for electrolytic this morning, and so far as could be learned these prices were not being shaded by smaller producers or dealers. Iron was unchanged. ST. LOUIS, Mo.—LEAD—Quiet at 4.25c. ZINC—Slab, dull at 4.90c.

WORLD'S·GRAIN MARKET·NEWS

Top prices on May wheat yesterday were 10c higher than the low point on Thursday, and July was up 4⅜c. Corn showed an advance of 3½c on the May and 2½c on the July from the low point of the week, while oats were up 2½@3c. It was said that all the weak holders have liquidated and that a further rally is due. There are a good many traders who believe that prices are to be better for a few days and possibly for a longer period, depending upon the amount of help secured from the outside.

A few of the traders who have bought wheat the last few days on the belief there was decline enough say the emergency tariff bill is likely to change the entire wheat situation for a time and that the big premiums for Manitoba wheat will be a factor from now on. It is assumed there is a sleeping short interest in May wheat, and with light stocks and a good decrease to show up in Monday's report, the position of the shorts is not a pleasant one.

Good buying of May and July corn has been on for several days, attributed to the largest shorts. Exporters were bidding more freely for corn and were not disposed to report business, which was taken as indicating that more was on the way than they cared to talk about. The Corn Products company was in the market yesterday for a fair quantity of corn, with only 38 cars on the market.

The emergency tariff bill places an import duty of 35c a bu on wheat and 10c a bu on corn. The duty of 6c a bu on oats has been in force at all times, and has not been changed. It is said that a good part of the wheat receipts at Minneapolis and Duluth are Canadian wheat.

GRAIN RECEIPTS LIGHTER

Grain receipts have fallen off sharply as a result of the low prices. Wheat, however, is an exception and primary receipts were 5,628,000 bu the last week, an increase of 337,000 bu over the previous week, and 3,414,000 bu as compared with last year. Corn receipts were 2,448,000 bu, showing a loss of 472,000 bu for the week, and a gain of 391,000 bu over last year. In oats there were 1,911,000 bu, or 185,000 bu less than the previous week and 7,000 bu more than last year, and with that exception they were the lightest in over five years. Total primary receipts of grain were 14 per cent below the average, being only 10,937,000 bu.

Chicago received 263,000 bu of wheat and shipped 514,000 bu for the week. The movement of corn increased 25,000 bu, with receipts of 1,072,000 bu, the lightest in weeks, and were 763,000 bu over last year. Of oats there were only 780,000 bu received and 1,019,000 bu shipped, indicating a sharp reduction in stocks for the week. The total receipts were 14 per cent over last year's and 36 per cent below the average.

WILSON CO. ISSUE FOR $3,000,000 OUT TOMORROW

Another piece of Chicago packing house financing will appear tomorrow when $3,000,000 Wilson & Co. first mortgage gold 6 per cent bonds will be offered by a syndicate composed of Blair & Co., the Guaranty Trust company, Hallgarten & Co., the Illinois Trust and Savings bank, and the Continental and Commercial Trust and Savings bank. The price will be 88, to yield about 7.10 per cent.

The bonds are part of an authorized issue of $25,000,000, dated April 1, 1916, and maturing April 1, 1941. The present offering price contrasts with $15,000,000 sold in March, 1916, at par and $5,000,000 sold in January, 1919, at 98½. The previous issues were used to retire $8,099,000 6 per cent debentures maturing June 1, 1916, and to provide additional working capital.

The state of North Dakota will open a Chicago office tomorrow for the purpose of selling directly to the public an issue of $3,000,000 bonds authorized by the legislature nearly two years ago, but only recently pronounced constitutional by the courts. The decision to market the bonds followed conferences last week between Chicago officials and the governor, attorney general, and director general of the Bank of North Dakota.

The closing hog market was active on the heavier weights at strong to slightly higher prices, while underweights declined 10@15c owing to practically no shipping demand. The Armour and Swift houses purchased half the 10,500 fresh and "stale" offerings. Day's top at $9.20 for carload lots was 15c below Friday's top.

Sharply higher prices on 'change for corn and provision futures added tone to the hog trade, more especially on the 200 to 300 lb averages. Day's average at $8.40 was 50c lower than previous Saturday, with the week's average at $8.35, lowest since February, 1916.

Week's receipts of hogs at 141,800 were largest in five weeks and 15,200 above the ten year average for corresponding week since 1910. Estimated average weight last week at 238 lbs was 2 lbs lighter than previous week and 4 lbs heavier than the ten year average.

Cattle Gain 50c for Week.

After starting the week 50c@$1.00 lower than the previous Monday, the cattle market improved and closed around 50c above the start of the week. Yearlings outsold heavy steers during the week, yet the top at $9.50 was as low as any week since 1916.

Demand export orders, which absorbed nearly 2,000 cattle, the largest week's movement of the year, added tone to the cattle trade, and it is expected the foreign demand will continue to increase. Exporters purchased 1,200 to 1,400 lb steers largely at $8.65@9.00.

Increased export demand also had a strengthening effect on the sheep and lambs carrying good weight, which closed 25@50c above a week ago. Light lambs closed about the same as a week ago. Exporters bought lambs largely at $7.25@7.75.

Receipts at Chicago for next Monday are estimated at 18,000 cattle, 40,000 hogs, and 21,000 sheep, against 20,959 cattle, 23,993 hogs, and 13,925 sheep corresponding Monday a year ago. Next week's receipts are estimated at 52,000 cattle, 140,000 hogs, and 75,000 sheep.

Various estimates placed probable hog receipts for next Monday at 32,000 to 50,000. F. R. Burrows guessed 32,000; G. M. Nicoll, 35,000; J. M. Waters and W. H. Overman, 38,000; Felix Gehrmann, 40,000; E. G. Gentry, 43,000; John T. Brown, 45,000, and William Garrett, 50,000.

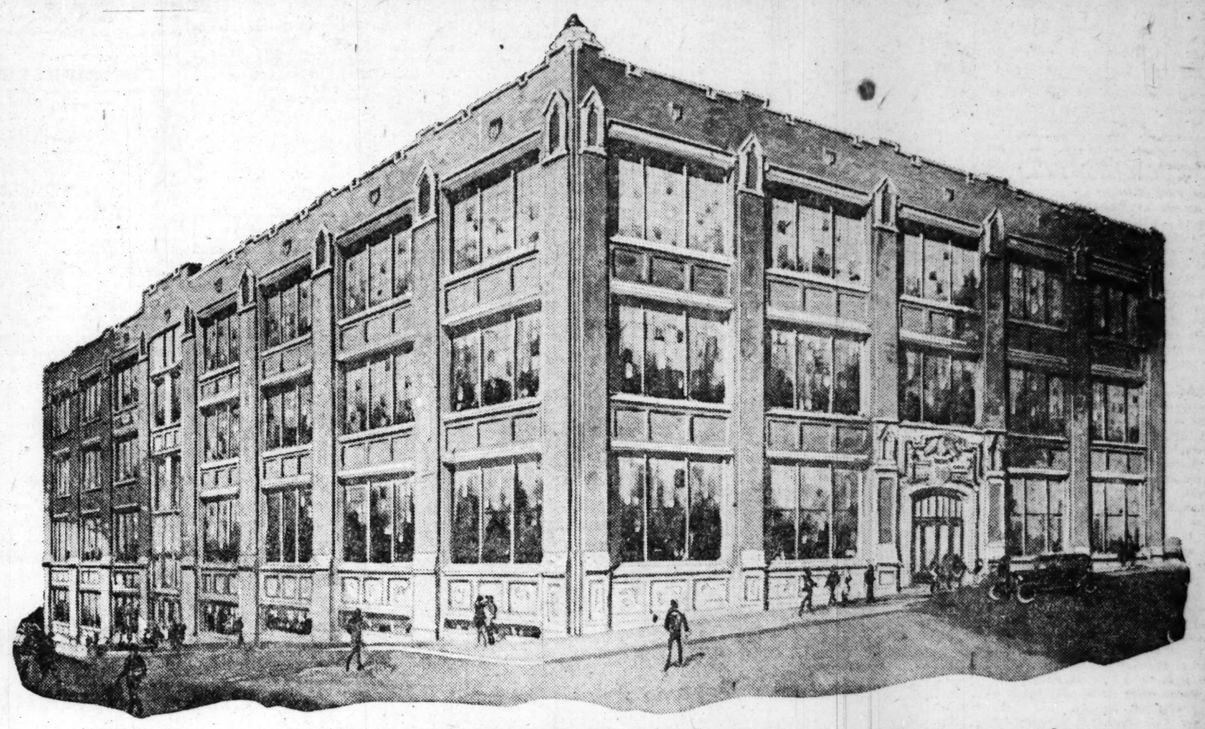
Commercial Station First Mortgage 7% Gold Bonds

Secured by Building, Land and Equipment Located in St. Paul, Minnesota, and Leased as a

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT POSTOFFICE



INCOME ASSURED THROUGH TWENTY-YEAR LEASE TO UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

THE building has been leased to the United States Government for twenty years at a yearly rental of $120,775, or $2,415,500 for the term. The lease does not contain a cancellation clause—hence the earnings, which for the term are sufficient to pay the entire bond issue over three times, are assured for twenty years.

Largest in St. Paul

THIS will be the largest postoffice station in St. Paul, and will be three stories and basement in height. It will be constructed of steel, terra cotta and brick. Total value of security is over $1,000,000, and as the bonds are retired rapidly each year, the margin of security will be constantly increased.

Exceptional Location

THE building will be located on the southwest corner of Third and Sibley Streets, just across the street from St. Paul's new $12,000,000 Union Depot, with which it is connected by a tunnel. This is in the heart of the city, surrounded by all the business activities, and is unquestionably one of the choicest locations in the city.

Denominations, $100, $500 and $1,000. Maturities, two to ten years.
Normal Federal Income Tax of 4% on income of bonds paid by mortgagors.

The New York Times.

New York, April 16.—[Special.]—In a market more active than has lately been usual of a Saturday, prices of stocks again advanced, but the movement was irregular and none of the gains was equal to those of the day before. Being a "week-end market," this apparently meant that the impulse to recovery since Friday's favorable news had spent itself.

As a rule the day's changes in prices were only fractional. Otis Elevator and Peoples Gas were features for strength, while the weakness in Pullman company continued.

Considering the adverse influences which prevailed in the early part of last week, it is interesting to observe that comparison of today's closing prices with those of the preceding Saturday shows large predominance of substantial net advances. This is true even of the railway shares, most of which are now some points above their recent low level. The course of the bond market has been less favorable; declines considerably outnumber advances.

In today's foreign exchange market, sterling very naturally provided the movement of principal interest; its continued recovery carried the rate to $3.92¾, the previous high level of the year. Lire receded further to 4.61½ cents and francs were firm.

CHICAGO CURB STOCKS

A mixed tone was in evidence among the local unlisted securities. Butler Brothers was ex-dividend five-eighths of a point, closing at 34 bid, 34½ asked, which represented a fractional decline for the week. Kellogg Switchboard and Supply showed a decided improvement, stock being in demand at 36½, with offerings at 38 at latest quotations. Goodyear Tire and Rubber preferred showed a stronger tone, advancing several points to sales at 39½, but closed with a net gain of 3 points at 37; the common ranged between 12½ and 14¼. Wahl preferred and Creamery Package continued steady at 86 to 88 and 24½ to 26, respectively. Brunswick Balke "A" was unchanged at 82 bid, while the preferred was quiet at 86 to 90.

Motor stocks were generally lower, Packard easing off to 10¼ bid, 10¾ asked. Reo was offered at 21¼, with buyers at 20¾. Continental was fractionally lower, selling at 6⅝. McCord common was less active, with the majority of stock changing hands between 10½ and 11. Little interest was noted in the sugar shares. Holland-St. Louis was traded in at 8½, closing at 8 bid, offered at 87; Michigan, 7½ to 8; Columbia, 11½ to 12¼.

Public utility sales were as follows: American Light common, 88; preferred, 82. American Power and Light common, 53½. American Public Utilities common, 7¼; preferred, 18. American Water Works common, 4⅝; first preferred, 46½. Cities Service common, 237; preferred, 66½. Northern States Power common, 47½. Standard Gas common, 11¼; preferred, 34¾. United Light common, 26-24; preferred, 60½@61. Western Power common, 22½; preferred, 68.

In the local bond market traction issues were the feature, practically all showing substantial advances. The Chicago Railways series "A" were the leader with an advance of 5 points, closing at the top at 45 bid, and limited offerings at 50. The series "B" sold up from 29 to 32 bid, while the Chicago City Railway 5s gained 4 points to 66½ bid, and the Chicago City Railways 5s to 65¾. Chicago Telephone 5s were unchanged at 93½ to 94¼, but Commonwealth Edison 5s improved a half to 84½ to 85, and Peoples Gas 5s were in better demand at 71 to 71⅛.

The packing house issues were without special feature, the majority showing slight declines. Armour 7s were unchanged at 96¼ to 96⅝, and although Morris 7½s were very active, sales were within a narrow range, closing quotation being 97¾ to 98¼. National Leather 8s were in good demand, selling around 95½, but Swift 5s were off fractionally at 86¼ to 86¾. The 7s declined a quarter to 96¼ to 96⅝, while the 6s of 1921 were unchanged at 99⅛ to 99⅜. Cudahy 7s held their recent advance, closing in good demand at 98⅞, with offerings at 99½. Both the Wilson convertible 6s and first 6s were unchanged at 84 to 84½ and 89 to 89½, respectively. In the miscellaneous group, Sears-Roebuck 7s of 1921, 1922 and 1923 were all stronger, sales benig made at 99½, 96⅝ and 96¾, representing an improvement of about five-eighths all around.

Why You Must Have Beautiful Well-Kept Hair to be Attractive

Illustrated by WILL GREFÉ

Copyright 1920
The R. L. W. Co

EVERYWHERE you go your hair is noticed most critically. It tells the world what you are.

If you wear your hair becomingly and always have it beautifully clean and well-kept, it adds more than anything else to your attractiveness.

Beautiful hair is not a matter of luck, it is simply a matter of care.

Study your hair, take a hand mirror and look at the front, the sides, and the back. Try doing it up in various ways. See just how it looks best.

A slight change in the way you dress your hair, or in the way you care for it, makes all the difference in the world in its appearance.

In caring for the hair, shampooing is always the most important thing.

It is the shampooing which brings out the real life and lustre, natural wave and color, and makes your hair soft, fresh and luxuriant.

When your hair is dry, dull and heavy, lifeless, stiff and gummy, and the strands cling together, and it feels harsh and disagreeable to the touch, it is because your hair has not been shampooed properly.

When your hair has been shampooed properly, and is thoroughly clean, it will be glossy, smooth and bright, delightfully fresh-looking, soft and silky.

While your hair must have frequent and regular washing to keep it beautiful, it cannot stand the harsh effect of ordinary soap. The free alkali in ordinary soaps soon dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and ruins it.

That is why discriminating people use Mulsified Cocoanut Oil Shampoo. This clear, pure and entirely greaseless product cannot possibly injure and it does not dry the scalp, or make the hair brittle, no matter how often you use it.

If you want to see how really beautiful you can make your hair look, just

Follow This Simple Method

FIRST, wet the hair and scalp in clear, warm water. Then apply a little Mulsified Cocoanut Oil Shampoo, rubbing it in thoroughly all over the scalp and throughout the entire length, down to the ends of the hair.

Rub the Lather in Thoroughly

TWO or three teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather. This should be rubbed in thoroughly and briskly with the finger tips, so as to loosen the dandruff and small particles of dirt and dust that stick to the scalp.

When you have done this, rinse the hair and scalp thoroughly, using clear, fresh, warm water. Then use another application of Mulsified. You can easily tell when the hair is perfectly clean, for it will be soft and silky in the water.

Rinse the Hair Thoroughly

THIS is very important. After the final washing the hair and scalp should be rinsed in at least two changes of good warm water and followed with a rinsing in cold water. When you have rinsed the hair thoroughly, wring it as dry as you can; and finish by rubbing it with a towel, shaking it and fluffing it until it is dry. Then, give it a good brushing.

After a Mulsified Shampoo you will find the hair will dry quickly and evenly and have the appearance of being much thicker and heavier than it is.

If you want to always be remembered for your beautiful, well-kept hair, make it a rule to set a certain day each week for a Mulsified Cocoanut Oil Shampoo. This regular weekly shampooing will keep the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, fresh-looking and fluffy, wavy and easy to manage, and it will be noticed and admired by everyone.

You can get Mulsified Cocoanut Oil Shampoo at any drug store or toilet goods counter. A 4-ounce bottle should last for months.

Splendid for children. Fine for men.

Your Hair Should be Dressed so as to Emphasize Your Best Lines and Reduce Your Worst Ones

Begin by studying your profile. If you have a pug nose, do not put your hair on the top of your head; if you have a round, fat face, do not fluff your hair out too much at the sides; if your face is very thin and long, then you should fluff your hair out at the sides. The woman with the full face and double chin should wear her hair high. All these and other individual features must be taken into consideration in selecting the proper hairdress. Above all, simplicity should prevail. You are always most attractive when your hair looks most natural—when it looks most like you.

THE TWO SECRETS OF A YOUTHFUL LOOKING SKIN

One cream that safeguards the skin by day—protecting and holding the powder: another that cares for it by night—cleansing the pores and warding off wrinkles

NEVER were women more ageless than today! But now as always the measure of a woman's youth is her skin. A girlish looking skin—or the most unsophisticated frock must be in vain.

Fortunately a youthful complexion is largely a question of how you care for your skin. Our living conditions make all manner of extra demands on the skin, so that to look its best today every normal skin needs two creams. One for the daytime and quite another one to use at night.

The cream for daytime and evening use is a dry cream with no oil to reappear in a maddening shine. But the cream before going to bed must have an oil base if it is to cleanse and chase away the wrinkles.

To protect from wind, dust and sun—the cream without oil

If you don't protect your skin it will protect itself by developing a tough, leathery surface. Then the soft texture of youth is forever lost!

Sun inflames the skin. In an effort to protect the delicate tissues beneath, the skin then becomes opaque—tanned. This coarsens its texture. The tan itself eventually fades, but the ugly coarsened texture remains. Wind whips the natural moisture out of the skin. Dust bores deep into the pores, dulling and blemishing the complexion.

Always give your skin this invisible protection before going out. Smooth in a bit of Pond's Vanishing Cream. It disappears instantly, leaving your skin soft and smooth. There is no oil to reappear in a dreaded shine. Your skin will repay this care by its satin-like youthful surface.

Powder stays twice as long held by an oil-less foundation cream

At last that terror of a shiny nose need haunt no longer! The cream without oil has banished it. Touch your face with Pond's Vanishing Cream—then powder. See how evenly your smoothed skin takes the powder—how firmly this foundation cream holds it. No more furtive powdering in public—and you are doubly safe for there is no oil in Pond's to reappear in a glisten.

Furthermore this protective cream, skin specialists tell us, prevents the tiny grains of powder from working their way into your pores and enlarging them.

If you sometimes need color, this vanishing cream base is again wonderfully valuable. To make the color look even and natural on a skin not prepared for it is almost impossible. It catches on all those irregularities in the skin that are tiny but tell-tale. Smooth them out first by lightly touching your skin with Pond's Vanishing Cream. It is based on an ingredient prescribed by a famous physician for its softening effect. Your smoothed skin takes the color evenly, and holds it.

To cleanse the pores as a radiant skin demands—the cream with oil

The exquisite clarity of skin that spells youth—only skin that is thoroughly cleansed may retain it. Some dust and dirt bore too deep for ordinary washing and lurking down in the pores dull the youthful radiance of the skin. At night after washing, go over your face generously with Pond's Cold Cream. Containing just enough oil, it works easily but deeply into the pores, cleansing them exquisitely. Then wipe it gently off. You will be amazed at the amount of dust your skin picks up each day.

Lest tiny lines arrive and deepen—the oil base cream

Fatigue and time are always etching their tiny betraying lines. Fine lines before the ears, under the chin, around the mouth and eyes, lines that deepen so swiftly telling unnecessary secrets. To supplement the natural oil and ward them off, be faithful to the oil cream. Pond's Cold Cream has been made so noticeably light in texture that with it the gentlest stroking is enough. Too vigorous manipulation of the skin often encourages instead of banishing wrinkles.

Begin today to use these two creams

Both creams are so light in texture that they cannot clog the pores, and they will not encourage the growth of hair.

Get them today at any drug or department store. Or if you desire samples first, take advantage of the sample offer below. The Pond's Extract Company, B-24 Hudson Street, New York.

ARCOLA
Heating Outfits

Here is a bargain —a genuine IDEAL Hot Water Heating Plant at a price within the reach of the owner of a modest home.

Write or call for illustrated catalog showing open views of Ideal-ARCOLA Heating Outfit installations in 4, 5, 6 and 7 room cottages, bungalows, flats, schools, stores and small buildings.

"A Warm Introduction"

NOTHING in the Bride's Bungalow receives (or deserves) greater praise than the new Ideal-ARCOLA Heating Outfit. It is the center of attraction because it changes the house into a home, requires so little attention, and uses so little coal. Day and night it keeps the whole house full of soft, radiant warmth.

For Chilly or Severe Weather

A small fire gives just enough heat in early spring days to free the house from chill and dampness. It protects the family health. Women like ARCOLA Hot Water Heat. It is so healthful, clean, and easy to run. The fire lasts from eight to ten hours without attention.

Greatest Fuel Saving

Thousands of owners tell us that their ARCOLAS heat ALL rooms with actually less fuel than previously consumed by one or two stoves to heat only a part of their homes.

In New or Old Homes

Whether you intend to build or remodel, figure an ARCOLA as one of the best paying investments in your home. If you have a flat building each tenant may have a separate ARCOLA and run his plant to suit himself. Installation is very easy and quickly made, as pipes may be run through partitions or left exposed, thus helping to warm the rooms. No valves or accessories are necessary. The outfit outlasts the building.

Reduced in Size and Cost

The ARCOLA is made on the same principle and with the same guarantee as our large IDEAL Heating Plants. The only difference is in the smaller size and lower cost of the outfit. ARCOLAS are especially designed for small homes with or without cellars. Sold by heating contractors everywhere.

Get an estimate at present low prices for an Ideal-ARCOLA Heating Outfit for your home. See demonstrating outfits in our showrooms in all large cities and in heating contractors' shops.

Three things you must not neglect—

If you want a beautiful skin

"A Skin You Love to Touch," from the painting by John Newton Howitt

NO matter what your type of skin happens to be —three qualities it must have:—

It must be clear; it must be smooth; it must be fine in texture.

No skin can be attractive if it is not clear. If your skin is continually breaking out with ugly little blemishes—begin at once to check this tendency before it becomes habitual. Use the special Woodbury treatment shown on this page, and see how quickly your skin will improve—how it will gain day by day the flawless clearness it should have.

Keep your skin smooth: A lovely soft smoothness is one of the greatest charms your skin can have —but the more sensitive it is, the more quickly it will lose this quality unless it receives just the right treatment. For a tender, sensitive skin, use the special form of cleansing given below.

Keep your skin fine in texture: Enlarged pores —especially conspicuous nose pores—can spoil a skin that is otherwise flawless. If, when you examine your skin in a strong light, you find that these pores are becoming noticeable—it means that you are not using the right method of cleansing for your special type of skin. Don't neglect this condition—for conspicuous nose pores have a tendency to become larger, if neglected.

Remember—no matter what the condition of your skin—by the right treatment, followed persistently, you can overcome its defects. For your skin is constantly changing. Each day old skin dies and new takes its place. Give this new skin, as it forms, the right care, and see how quickly it will improve—how clear, soft and fine you can make it!

In addition to the three special treatments given on this page, you will find additional treatments for all the commoner skin troubles, in the famous booklet, "A Skin You Love to Touch." This booklet is wrapped around every cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap.

Get a cake of Woodbury's today at any drug store or toilet goods counter—find the special treatment your skin needs and begin using it tonight.

A 25-cent cake of Woodbury's lasts for a month or six weeks of any treatment and for general cleansing use.

"Your treatment for one week"

Send 25 cents for the new miniature set of Woodbury's skin preparations, containing your complete Woodbury treatment for one week. In it you will find the famous booklet, "A Skin You Love to Touch"; a trial size cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap; and samples of Woodbury's Facial Cream, Woodbury's Cold Cream and Facial Powder. Write today for this special outfit. Address The Andrew Jergens Co., 108 Spring Grove Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Conspicuous nose pores grow larger if neglected

To reduce conspicuous nose pores, follow every night this simple treatment:

Wring a soft cloth from very hot water, lather it with Woodbury's Facial Soap, then hold it to your face. When the heat has expanded the pores, rub in very gently a fresh lather of Woodbury's. Repeat this hot water and lather application several times, stopping at once if your nose feels sensitive. Finish by rubbing the nose for 30 seconds with a piece of ice.

Do not expect to change in a week a condition resulting from long neglect. But follow the treatment persistently and you will be able to reduce the enlarged pores and make them inconspicuous.

To free your skin from blemishes—the right way

Each night just before retiring, wash your face with Woodbury's Facial Soap and warm water, finishing with a dash of cold water, and dry carefully. Now dip the tips of your fingers in warm water and rub them on the cake of Woodbury's until they are covered with a heavy, creamlike lather. Cover each blemish with a thick coat of this and leave it on for ten minutes. Rinse your face thoroughly, first with clear, hot water, then with cold.

Have you a tender, sensitive skin? —A special treatment for it

Each night before retiring dip a soft washcloth in warm water and hold it to your face. Now make a warm water lather of Woodbury's Facial Soap and dip your cloth up and down in it until the cloth is "fluffy" with the soft white lather. Rub this lathered cloth gently over your skin until the pores are thoroughly cleansed. Rinse first with warm, then with clear, cool water and dry carefully.

Use daily—to keep your skin in good condition

If used regularly, Woodbury's Facial Soap has a markedly beneficial effect on the skin as an organism. This is due to the fact that it is based on a special formula, the result of years of scientific study of the skin and its needs. Only the purest and finest ingredients enter into this formula. In consequence Woodbury's Facial Soap can be used with extremely sensitive and tender skins, which often react unfavorably to other toilet soaps.

Use Woodbury's daily in your toilet, and see how instantly your skin will respond to its tonic qualities.

You will find Woodbury's one of the most economical soaps you have ever used. A 25-cent cake lasts for a month or six weeks—almost twice as long as an ordinary toilet soap of the same apparent size.

GEORGE ARLISS, my dears—George Arliss! "The Devil" he is! I suppose you've seen him in the screen adaptation which is now making the rounds.

Mr. Arliss is an Englishman. His skill in the manipulation of his eyeglass has had not a little to do with the honor and glory which have come to him through the years. Mr. Arliss was born in England. After long experience in the provinces he first attracted attention in the company of Mrs. Patrick Campbell. With her he appeared in "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" and "The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith." He created the part of Zakkuri in "The Darling of the Gods," supporting Miss Blanche Bates. He has been with Mrs. Fiske and others. He was famous as Disraeli.

To him belongs the distinction of being the first actor to appear on the American stage in the title role of Molnar's "The Devil."

ANN FORREST will be dressed like this when you see her in "The Faith Healer," which George Melford is making for Paramount. What's it made of? Pink silk all over lace makes the skirt, which has a hoop of lavender net and flowers. The bodice is a confection of silver pink cloth. The fan? Well, what does it look like? Feathers.

Miss Forrest is a Danish girl. She was born in 1897 and educated over there. I don't know how she happened to come over here, but I do know she's been connected with American, Universal, and Goldwyn. She's five feet two inches tall, weighs 104 pounds, and has blonde hair and blue eyes.

EILEEN SEDGWICK, a Texas girl, is soon to appear in a Universal serial, "The Terror Trail."

Miss Sedgwick was born and educated in Galveston. She has been on the stage since childhood. Her screen career started with Universal quite recently when she was given the lead with Eddie Polo in "The Lure of the Circus." In this Miss Sedgwick proved that she had considerable ability and Universal has been boosting her right along.

If you must have details, the lady is five feet three inches tall, weighs 120 pounds, has blonde hair and dark blue eyes. Her telephone number—but, now, why on earth should I give you that!

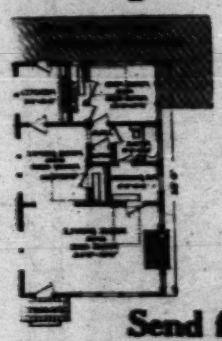
The Aladdinette Home or Detached Apartment

The Aladdinette Home is a modernized conception of efficiency, convenience and utility. It converts wasted space of house plans into utilized space, thus saving housework and reducing to their simplest terms order and neatness. Each design offers the convenience and utility of house or home twice its size. The secret of this accomplishment is in the planning combined with the adaptation of accessories now used in expensive apartments, private railroad cars and the like. The accessories are fully explained in a book which will be sent promptly to anyone upon request.

Compare Aladdinette Advantages



The quickest and most successful method to find the great advantage of an Aladdinette Home is to compare one to an old style home. Take for example the Abbott, another very popular Aladdinette. It possesses six rooms. However, it has nine room value and utility. The size of the Abbott is 24x38 feet. An extra 432 square feet of space would be necessary in building the old type of home to secure the advantages and utility of the Abbott Aladdinette. In other words an addition similar in size to that indicated by the dotted line in the diagram would be necessary, in any other type of home, to equal this floor plan.

That means—A Big Saving on cost for excavating for foundation,
A Big Saving on cost for foundation,
A Big Saving on cost for material for the house,
A Big Saving on cost for labor on foundation,
A Big Saving on cost for painting, plastering, etc.

Yes, the extra costs would amount to practically one-third more, or, on a three thousand dollar Aladdinette, an average of $1000 would be saved in cost without losing one single advantage.

A wide range of home suggestions are found in the book of Aladdinette Homes, with prices to suit the desires and needs of the average family. The Aladdinette offers you a big saving in building a home, gives you seven room value at the cost of a four room house. This book has helped many who had a serious home building problem. It will interest and help you, too. Send stamps for your copy of book, "Aladdinette Homes" No. 859.

What Is an Aladdinette Home?

It is an apartment that separated itself from other apartments and became a house by itself. For practical efficiency, convenience and utility you cannot improve upon the modern accommodations in a big apartment building, but the undesirable features, such as crowding many families in one building; the lack of yard space, etc., have proven detrimental to the big apartment building type of home. The desirable features of both the apartment and the detached home are combined in the Aladdinette. The convenience of properly arranged, expertly proportioned rooms, which are typical of the apartment, together with the privacy of the detached home and freedom of yard and lawns, constitute the features that make for the popularity of the Aladdinette with the American family. The Aladdinette book explains this home in detail. It satisfies the most exacting with the remarkable utility of each Aladdinette home. The low cost of completion will surprise every builder. Don't delay sending for your copy. It will help you to a better home—and at a saving. Send today for book "Aladdinette Homes" No. 859.

E. W. Shull, 104 David Ave., Joliet, Ill., writes: "I am the owner of an Aladdin house and a very satisfied owner at that. The material in my home is the best and every piece fits perfectly. I can safely say that in building my Aladdin house I saved $402.00. I believe the time is near at hand when all frame buildings will be readi-cut."

Dollar-a-Knot Quality

Aladdin's Dollar-a-Knot Guarantee is proof of high quality. Knotless lumber, the purest and clearest that ever came out of the forest, is the kind that Aladdin Homes are made of. This is evidenced by our famous Dollar-a-Knot Guarantee, which has now been in effect for over five years.

Danger signals of the skin

Pimples, blackheads and boils are signs of lowered vitality

"THE causes of acne (pimples and blackheads) are always found in a lowered vitality," writes a skin specialist connected with several of New York's important hospitals. And "the repeated occurrence of boils should always be looked upon as an indication of lowered vitality," he also states.

Scientists now know that the real cause of the trouble may be some error in diet.

If the food we eat is poor in the newly discovered substance called vitamine, we fall off in health and easily get such ailments as pimples, blackheads and boils. Something is clearly needed to correct the basic trouble of these widespread complaints. And now scientists have discovered it in a familiar little cake of food.

It is now known that yeast is rich in a mysterious factor called vitamine—just the familiar cake of yeast that we have all known as good for just one thing, to raise bread. This vitamine we need throughout life. Without it we cannot get the strength and vigor from our food that we must have in order to keep in health. Yet many of our everyday foods lack this necessary vitamine.

To correct the widespread ailments of pimples, boils and constipation, physicians and hospitals are therefore prescribing Fleischmann's Yeast as an addition to the regular meals. As a result thousands of men and women are being freed of these painful and embarrassing minor ailments.

Yeast may be eaten like any other food. It is highly digestible. You may eat from one to three cakes a day. Within two weeks you should notice an improvement, but obstinate cases may require four or five weeks for the benefit to be apparent.

You will quickly learn to like the "cream-cheesy" taste of Fleischmann's Yeast spread on cracker or bread, or just plain. If troubled with gas, dissolve yeast in boiling water.

Place a standing order with your grocer for Fleischmann's Yeast and get it delivered fresh every day. To get the valuable free booklet, "The New Importance of Yeast in Diet," address THE FLEISCHMANN COMPANY, Dept. 132-B, 701 Washington Street, New York, N. Y.

Typical cases: how they were helped

In investigations carried on in leading institutions in Philadelphia and New York, the value of Fleischmann's Yeast in treating pimples and boils was clearly demonstrated. There was rapid improvement in cases of acne, and cases of boils were either greatly improved or cured within two weeks.

One typical case of pimples was that of a patient who had had a moderate eruption on face and body for three years. Three cakes of yeast daily before meals were given and the eruption cleared almost completely in four weeks.

For pimples and boils eat one to three cakes a day. In acute cases always consult your physician.

Beautify Your Hair with "DANDERINE"

35c a bottle! Freshen your scalp! Stop falling hair! Remove dandruff! Have lots of wavy, glossy, beautiful hair! You can!

IF YOU care for heavy hair, that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair; besides, it eradicates every particle of dandruff; you cannot have nice, heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its luster, its strength and its very life; and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp, the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast.

If your hair has been neglected and is thin, faded, dry, scraggy, or too oily, get a bottle of Knowlton's Danderine, apply a little as directed, and ten minutes after you will say this was the best investment you ever made.

We sincerely believe, regardless of everything else advertised, that if you desire soft, lustrous, beautiful hair and lots of it—no dandruff—no itching scalp and no more falling hair—you must use Knowlton's Danderine. If eventually, why not now?

Why do most women wear Kayser Silk Gloves?

Because—they fit best—wear best

KAYSER Silk Gloves are the most economical gloves because:

They contain more silk—and pure silk.

Washing cannot make pure silk look thin and streaky.

That is why KAYSER Silk Gloves wear so long and look so well after repeated washings.

KAYSER Silk Gloves cost no more than the ordinary kind. The name KAYSER is in the hem, and with each pair is a guarantee ticket that the tips will out-wear the gloves.

In a group do you stand out or is your beauty overshadowed?

Look for this label on the bottom of every box.

YOU are sure to feel an irritating impatience with yourself when, in a group gathered for an evening of social gaiety, you find that your beauty is completely overshadowed. One or two women usually dominate the situation and become the center of attraction—the rest form the background.

Naturally you resent being part of the unnoticed group—but why are you not one of the few who stand out? Why not cultivate and intensify your individual charms—as the Parisian woman does—so that you are a distinct type?

Study your coloring

In the century-famed ateliers of Dorin of Paris, poudres and rouges, of exquisite softness and refinement, have been perfected for the many types of blondes and brunettes. They are imported from Paris and sold throughout America—in the better drug and department stores.

ONCE in a NORTHERN TWILIGHT by Mary Synon

How One Shot Out of the Dusk Brought the Hope of Happiness to Two Men and Two Women

Kendrick was bending over Ted Leffen. Edith stood across from them, her lips tight, her eyes stormily contemptuous.

EDITH KENDRICK was watching the trail of foam in the wake of a motor boat far out on Porcupine Lake when Letty Williams came up the corduroy road from Golden City. We had been talking of the sea, Mrs. Kendrick and Constable and I, while we had waited for the coming of the other guests whom Kendrick was asking to the dinner in celebration of Ted Leffen's gold strike at the Missinaibi. Hundreds of miles from the Atlantic, up there in the North Country under the eaves of James Bay, shut in by the Wilderness of the Bush, we were drifting into the old nostalgia for salt water that only those who have dwelt beside the ocean know after they have lived in exile.

It was an ancient chapter with argonauts like ourselves, but always Edith Kendrick seemed to live it with a strange and wistful intensity queerly at variance with her indifferent acceptance of the life in which Kendrick held her. It dowered her somehow with a quality so apart from her husband that there were those of us in the Porcupine camp who shut our eyes to Kendrick's shady transactions in order that we might hold his wife in our midst.

On that evening, with the air ominously heavy with threat of coming storm, her homesickness for a place and a time gone by overcast our pretense at gayety until we looked at each other with something like relief as we saw the girl on the road. "She's going to marry Ted Leffen," Mrs. Kendrick explained swiftly to our surprise at discovering her guest to be Letty. "Bert wanted her asked."

Constable flung a cryptic look at me as Edith Kendrick went to the door of the veranda to welcome the newcomer. We had always guessed that Kendrick staged his dinners for a purpose beyond social amenities, and we had suspected that he was entertaining for hot headed, hard drinking, wild young Ted Leffen so that he might worm his way into making money out of the boy's lucky find in the new camp; but we had never before had Edith's statement of her own passivity in the game. At that, however, she needed hardly to have said anything. That Letty Williams was coming up the tiny path to the house by the lake was proof enough that the affair was of Kendrick's stage management, for Letty Williams was of those whom Kendrick would know and whom Edith wouldn't.

There wasn't anything definitely against the girl, to be sure. She had come, a latter day voyageur, into the Porcupine as correspondent for a Montreal newspaper, and remained as assistant to Cary Connors in the getting out of the miniature weekly which chronicled the good luck and bad, the hopes and fears, the joy and sorrow which make up life to the full in a mining camp. She had chosen from the first to cast her lot with men rather than with women, and she had paid the price of her choosing in a social ostracism which became marked as the social system of Golden City developed. She had taken her sentence lightly, to all appearances, but her very gratitude, showing its face to Edith Kendrick now, showed that the iron must have entered her soul.

"Isn't this a pretty place?" she exclaimed admiringly as she came within the veranda's shelter, paying tribute unconsciously to the woman who had wrought the miracle of ordered beauty out of the wilderness. "And isn't it a lovely view?"

"We weren't admiring it properly, I'm afraid," Edith Kendrick said, slipping Letty into the conversation with that deftness of social skill which always made me wonder what she had been before she had married Kendrick and just why she had ever happened to marry him at all. "We were dreaming of how the sea must look in a sunset like this."

"I don't know," Letty Williams said. "I never saw it. Ted talks of it often, though. He comes from Halifax, you know."

"From Halifax? That's my town, but I didn't know him there."

"You wouldn't have." Letty gave her a smile which revealed amusement in the circumstance. "Ted didn't have much claim to fame in his boyhood. He must have had a pretty hard time, although you'd never find that out from him. Captain Stratton, though, his partner, sometimes says that——"

"Is that Ross Stratton?" Mrs. Kendrick's voice, modulated though it was, drew taut.

"Yes. He came from Halifax, too, didn't he?"

"I believe so. Has he been here long?"

"O, no. I met him in Haileybury. He's coming in tonight, though. That's why Ted didn't come with me. He's waiting to see if he comes up on the first boat from Frederick House Crossing."

I saw Edith's hand close tightly upon the arm of her wicker chair. A little tremor, as if of pain, twitched her mouth, but her voice held steady as she asked, "Is his wife coming with him?"

Letty Williams' eyes widened a little. "I really don't know," she said.

There fell a silence that Constable hastened to break. "I knew a Stratton in Goldfields before the war," he said. "Fine chap. No alloy in him."

"That would be Captain Stratton," Letty Williams said.

A smile, half scornful, half speculative, lifted Edith's lips. "I wonder," she mused. Then, as if she drew down a curtain in front of her emotion, she shut out personalities by a sudden shifting of the conversation; but the gaze of her eyes as they turned back toward the lake, all golden now in the light of the flare beyond the rim of the pines, deepened into brooding sadness which did not lift with Kendrick's coming.

A tall man, of a litheness which always reminded me of a panther, he came out of the house with a soft step which suggested stealth. His smile, affable enough and showing his remarkably even white teeth, never extended to his eyes, which seemed to watch the world as if it were a jackpot. His glance went over Constable and myself, appraising us rightly as stage settings, and rested questioningly upon Letty Williams. Beneath it she flushed hotly for a moment, then controlled herself into a glaze of good manners which strove to ignore her host. "Where's Ted?" he demanded of her at last.

"He'll be up in a little while," she said, and did not mention Stratton. Edith Kendrick shot at her a look which questioned the cause of the omission, but the girl seemed not to notice it, talking to me with a flurry of words I might have found annoying had I not glimpsed the worry in her eyes as she watched the road and known that she was watching for Leffen with more than the ordinary anxiety of a social responsibility. Her relief as he came in sight was so evident that Constable smiled at her.

"To be in love in the North Country in the springtime!" he said with a laugh that was almost a sigh. "What wouldn't we old timers give to win back that guerdon?"

"I wouldn't want it," Edith Kendrick said suddenly.

"Not flattering to me, is it?" Kendrick laughed nastily.

The straight look she gave him shouted that she had not been thinking of him. He met it with careless contempt that had in it the consciousness of power. They faced each other with unveiled hostility as they arose to greet Ted Leffen. Then, just as quickly, with the resilience of long training, they snapped back into their ordinary attitude of conjugal contentment as the boy turned in from the road.

He brought in his coming something of the freshness of a lusty wind, and Constable and I gave him greeting hardly less enthusiastic than was Letty's. Our pleasure in his sudden good fortune reflected, I think, that of the district, for Ted Leffen had never been any man's enemy but his own. Gay, blithe, and hopeful, he had come to the North Country as a free lance prospector. His courage and likability had inspired Stratton, who had been for years a prophet of the Porcupine, to stake the boy. For months he had been hunting along the Missinaibi, coming into Golden City only for supplies.

On one of these trips he had met Kendrick, who was always on watch to win the friendship of young prospectors, setting his spider traps for their entrance. From that time the hard drinking which men came to connect with Leffen's name went on whenever the boy appeared. Whether or not he had met Letty Williams before he had started to drink we did not know. Nor did we know whether or not his marriage to her, presaged so casually by Edith Kendrick, would change his ways. All we did know was that Kendrick held him close and that, for some reason, he was using Letty Williams to strengthen that hold. His manner toward the girl revealed his intention, but she affected to ignore it in absorbed attention to Leffen.

That the boy really loved her was unmistakable as he watched her. Pride in her shone in his eyes so honestly that I grew ashamed of my judgments on her. What if she were a weatherbeaten little bird of passage? She was going to give Leffen something that Edith Kendrick had surely never given to her husband. She was getting a devotion that swept aside everything but its own faith. No wonder that Constable beamed on them both and that Mrs. Kendrick stared at the boy and girl as if they were ghosts of a day she had long sought to forget. In the glow of such happiness only Kendrick's watchfulness seemed baneful; and even that flickered down as we followed his wife to the screened porch which they made the summer dining room.

There, at the foot of the table, spread brightly with the silver which they had packed through miles of muskeg, and gay with the early flowers of that garden for which Edith slaved so valiantly, she slipped into the rôle which she played so often in that setting. Not the homesick woman who had given confidence to Constable and myself, not the unhappy wife flinging defiance at her husband, but the hostess who, with the ease of long practice, keeps alive the spirit of the occasion for which her guests have been summoned.

Spirited, brilliant, charming, she took the bit of responsibility in her teeth and galloped down the road of conversation. She brought out Letty Williams until the girl's eyes shone with delight in realization of her own powers, and Leffen beamed upon them both. She led Leffen on until the boy expanded in rollicking humor. Even Kendrick's keen eyes glistened as the party slid on smoothly. Only once did he show annoyance, and that was when Ted Leffen pushed aside the champagne which the China boy had poured.

"Here's to you," he cried, springing to his feet, "your health and happiness! Good luck!"

He lifted his glass high, and Constable and I raised ours. Letty Williams looked at Leffen in troubled question. The boy bit his lip, hesitated, then downed the liquor. Edith Kendrick and Letty toyed with their glasses. The China boy came back and poured more for Kendrick and Ted. I thought I saw Letty signal to him to let it alone. If he saw her, he did not heed her. Steadily, and as swiftly as the servant followed Kendrick's instructions, Ted Leffen began to drink.

Little by little, led on perhaps as much by Kendrick's sharp questioning as by the wine, he began to boast. We had known that the strike at the Missinaibi promised riches, but we had not dreamed of the extent of the gold in the lode until the boy garrulously proclaimed the wealth of his Eldorado.

"It's richer than the Big Dome," he insisted, "richer than the Hollingworth, richer than any of them, Ken, richer, maybe, than all of them put together." Kendrick's eyes gleamed through the recountal. "But only half of it's mine. The other half's Stratton's. That's what I came in for this week. Going to meet him and turn over his share to him."

"Haven't you done it yet?" Kendrick asked.

"Plenty of time," Leffen maundered. "Plenty of money for us both. Lots for me and Letty. Isn't there, Letty?"

"Oh, Ted, stop talking about it," the girl said sharply. "We're all glad you have it, and you're glad, of course, but let it go at that."

"Going to call it the Letty," he persisted. "Let's drink to the Letty."

"Let's not," pleaded the girl.

"It's once in a lifetime," said Kendrick.

Letty's eyes blazed at him from the shadows that were falling over the side of the porch where she sat, but Edith gave no sign of desire to halt him. Constable, schooled as he was to all sorts of scenes, was revealing a faint edge of annoyance, and I was not surprised when he arose with us, leaving the man and boy alone.

"I'm not smoking tonight," he said, and followed us to the other veranda.

Once out of Kendrick's sight, Edith's spirits sagged visibly. She no longer made effort to roll the ball, and seemed, whenever she spoke, to be rousing herself from apathetic listlessness. Sometimes I had the feeling that she was watching for some one, just as I knew that Letty Williams was listening for sounds from the dining porch. All we could hear was the drone of conversation. Long minutes dragged, and still Kendrick and Leffen did not come. Constable grew plainly worried, while Edith affected to ignore the situation. Finally, driven by Letty's nervous agitation, she left us, going to summon the two men.

"I wish he hadn't made Ted drink tonight," Letty said worriedly when Edith had gone. "Captain Stratton will be in before midnight, and Ted should meet him. Ted can't stand it, and Bert Kendrick ought to know better."

"Should he?" Constable asked with sneering innuendo.

"Oh, well," she said enigmatically, "I suppose he can't do anything here."

Her tension tightened as Edith did not return. "Do you suppose Ted needs me?" she asked, held only by her sense of lack of acquaintanceship with the Kendricks, but so pitiful in her perturbation over the boy that I arose.

"I'll see," I said, and went after Edith.

I went through the living room toward the other porch, intending to call the trio there with assumed levity; but at the scene which faced me I halted. Kendrick was bending over Ted Leffen, directing his hand over a paper, literally steering his signature on the document. Edith stood back of a chair across from them, her arms folded, her lips tight, her eyes stormily contemptuous. Not even when Kendrick passed her the paper and she slipped it down into her dress did she abate a jot of her scorn. She stayed, looking down at the boy who sprawled over the table, while Kendrick passed her and went out upon the other veranda. After a little Leffen lifted his heavy head and saw her.

"It's all right," he told her with maudlin emphasis. "Bert's looking after it so Letty and I get half, and Ross gets half. Promised him half, and got to keep a promise, even if he don't need what I'll need. Ross hasn't wife, and I'll have Letty, but——"

"What did you say?" Edith Kendrick's voice cut across the silence with the sharpness of a stinging whip.

"I'll have Letty, but——"

"Are you sure, quite sure,"—she bent over the table till she had caught his attention, "that Ross Stratton has not married?"

"Why, of course he hasn't. Loved a girl in Halifax long time ago. Said she'd wait for him till he'd won a stake. Married another man. They all do—all but Letty."

"But he told me that——" She ceased to speak when she saw that Leffen's head had sunk back on the table, but she stood, staring at him as if he held answer to some puzzling conundrum of life. As if she had found what she sought, she turned her gaze outward from him. Then, slowly, as if it were a rite, she took from within her gown the folded document which Kendrick had given to her and lighted it at the flame of one of the candles, holding it over a silver plate until it had gone to ashes. Without another look at Leffen, she went back to her guests. "I think," she said to Letty, "that it would be just as well if Ted stayed awhile."

"I wouldn't mind," the girl said, trying to be brave under the lashes of humiliation, "if it weren't that he's to meet Captain Stratton tonight. It's important, too, something about registry of the mine claim in both their names."

"Here's Stratton now," Constable said, and Edith Kendrick's hand went to her throat as she followed Constable's look and saw a big man coming through the dusk.

"He's not coming—here?" she gasped.

"Why not?" Kendrick asked evenly, though his eyes burned in points of light. "I used to know him out in the Rand. Haven't seen him in years."

He struck a match futilely and flung it away with a curse. His face lowered in command as he watched his wife, but, without looking at him, she circled the chairs so that she was standing by the door when Stratton came to it. For a moment they looked at each other, two souls so evidently destined for meeting that all the circumstance of their contact fell away until Kendrick spoke.

"Won't you come in?" he asked, contriving to put a sneer into the invitation.

"I'm looking for Leffen," the big man said, opening the door. "I was told he was here."

He had found Constable, greeting him with cordiality tempered with surprise, and given Letty Williams a deference which seemed to assuage the girl's wounds. He did not look again at Edith, although she kept standing in his path.

"He's here," Kendrick said, moving toward the dining porch and nodding to Stratton to follow him.

For the instant while he hesitated Edith stood rigid. Then, impelled by swift decision, she held out her hand to Stratton.

"If you had come an hour ago," she said, "I should have asked you why you didn't bring your wife. I have just learned that you had not married."

"Who said I had?" He flung back his head.

"You did, didn't you, Bert?" She turned to Kendrick, who waited, impatient, at the door to the other veranda.

"When?" Stratton snapped out the query.

"Two weeks before we were married, wasn't it?"

"But you knew——" Stratton flashed at Kendrick.

"I'd heard it somewhere," Kendrick countered.

"Oh, no," Edith said, facing them both. "It wasn't that you'd merely heard it, Bert. You said you were at the wedding in Cape Town. You told me the girl's name, Veronica Mather. I haven't forgotten it, you see. She had golden hair, hadn't she? And a mint of money? And wasn't there ever a Veronica Mather?" She tried to keep her voice light in raillery, but beneath Stratton's steady look it broke.

"There was a girl named Mather out there," he said, "but I didn't know her. I wasn't married then or afterward. How did you happen to make that mistake, Kendrick?"

"I really don't know," Kendrick said indifferently. "Want to see Leffen?"

He opened the door for Stratton, and the other man, without a glance at him, went through. We could hear the murmur of voices from the other porch. They rose into angry altercation, Ted Leffen's among them. I heard Kendrick's disagreeably taunting laugh, and his words: "You're just a little too late, Stratton, after all. Leffen signed over the mine to me."

"It's a lie," I heard Stratton declare, with Ted Leffen's groan rushing after his words. "I signed something, Ross. He told me it was nothing but a memorandum of what I'd owed him for drinks. He's been getting it in for me. I signed it. O, God!"

Even as he spoke Letty Williams was on her feet. "He didn't," she moaned to me. "He couldn't have!" To the blanched agony of her face I longed to be able to give denial of the truth, but the memory of the scene I had witnessed swept over me.

"I'm afraid he did," I had to tell her.

She sprang forward, flinging open the door of the other porch. "You didn't make him do that?" she cried to Kendrick. "Why, it's terrible. It's theft. It's cheating. You made him drunk just for that. How dare you? You'll have to give it back to him, I tell you. You must give it back!"

"You're not threatening me, are you?" Kendrick sneered. "Your memory must be very, very poor if you think you dare do that, Letty, my dear. Perhaps you've forgotten that——"

"I've forgotten nothing," the girl said. "But I don't care about anything in the world but Ted. You shan't ruin him, I tell you. Before I let you do that, I'll——"

"If you care so much for him," Kendrick said, "are you sure that you want him to know—what I do?"

The implication of the man's threat sent her back against the wall, but she turned to Stratton. "Can't we force him to give it up?" she pleaded. "Can't we prove that he got it by fraud?"

"We'll see," Stratton said.

She moved to where Leffen sat limply at the table. "Ted, dear," she said, "are you quite sure you signed any paper? Sobered by the shock of the realization, he nodded miserably. "I've thrown it all away," he said desolately.

"No, you haven't," she told him. "We're going to fight for it. And it doesn't matter to you and to me whether we ever get it or not. But we're going to get it for Ross Stratton."

Over the boy's face went a wave of despair. "I'd forgotten him," he groaned. "That's the worst of it. I've been a traitor to him. I can't ever make that straight. I wish I'd never been born. What have I to live for, anyway? I'm nothing but——"

Letty Williams put her hand over his mouth. "We're going to fight it out," she told him, comfortingly, as if he were a child. "We're going to get it back for you and me and Ross. Come with us now." But he broke away from her hand, and flung off the porch. Constable, driven at last into action in the drama, which had unfolded so swiftly before us, took a part of his own. "Let me take you home," he said to Letty Williams. She had to pass Kendrick to come to him.

"Don't forget," Kendrick told her, apparently oblivious that his wife and Stratton stood within hearing, "that, if you decide to fight me, I may have weapons—and use them".

She made no answer, but went off with Constable down the path that Ted Leffen had taken but a moment before.

The three of them, Kendrick and Edith and Stratton, stood there in the deepening twilight so silent and so tense that there came over me the certainty that the play which I had thought ended by Letty Williams' going had not yet begun in earnest. I had the knowledge that I was an intruder, and I went back indoors for a parasol I had brought with me, thinking to slip off by the other door. I could not, however, get away from the sound of voices, and so it was that I heard Kendrick's.

"You won't mind, either of you, if I leave you for awhile? You'll find plenty to talk about, I am sure. There's me, for one, and Veronica Mather, for another. Queer I thought you'd married her, Stratton."

"Very queer."

"Well, good-by for a little while. Don't miss me too much."

The slam of a door followed. In the silence I could hear the lapping of the waves on the shore of the lake. A loon laughed somewhere near, and a bat flew by with flapping of wings. Then Edith spoke. "There's no use," she said, "in crying over spilt milk. But—what did he tell you, Ross, that made you stop writing to me?"

"He said that you were going to marry him."

"And he came back and told me you had

"Let him go!" she shouted again, moving nearer to where the two men struggled.

"No," and went on with an impatient contempt of her own: "You're always asking questions. What for? That's what I want to know."

last round. His heavy lidded eyes, swollen with drink and sleep, were closed, and from his mouth, as his head hung to one side, a dark stream ran to a little pool in the dust. Only a stertorous breathing showed his eflimp. No snipe ever made half the race for life that he put up in those fleeting seconds, and by his agility he earned then and there the nickname of the bird itself; for before the deadly sights could cover his flight again panied with shouts and yells. From the threatened cabin came no answering defiance. Henry's case looked bad as the wagon rolled down on him, but his rifle fire, though seemingly wasted, answered steadily.

Stone danced with joy: "He'll be running the gantlet next clip. He's not hitting anybody. He must be shooting," yelled the excited foreman, "at the blamed wagon."

A steady stream of bullets, undismayed, did continue to come from the cabin. Van Horn, who had run to the extreme right of the new sector, and was keeping a close watch on the go-devil was first to perceive trouble.

"Hell's delight, boys," he cried, taken aback, "he's shooting up the wheels."

The words flew around behind the rocks. The rifle fire was explained. Every eye was turned to the danger point, the wheel without the tire. It could be easily seen where the deliberate marksman was getting in his work. He had knocked one felloe off the rim and was smashing at the spokes close to the hub. It began to look like a race between the burning wagon and Henry at bay. The hay was a mound of flame and the sparks and smoke shot high into the air. A hundred feet more would lodge the fire trap against the rear wall of the cabin. But under the steady pounding of a rifle that seemed never to miss its mark the injured wheel showed fast increasing signs of distress. A second felloe was tracking uncertainly.

As a diversion, Van Horn, active, energetic and covering every part of his little line at once, ordered an incessant fire centered on the threatened cabin. Nothing seemed to check the regular report of the hidden high-powered rifle and the bullets that were splintering the old oak spokes. When the roaring wagon struck a loose stone or rough spot in its trackless path it wabbled and hesitated. Yet, jerked, steadied, halted and started by means of the long cable, it rolled to within twenty yards of its mark. There it pitched a bit, recovered and for another ten yards, sailed down a smooth piece of ground. The cowboys were yelling their loudest when a lucky shot from the cabin knocked off the second felloe. A second and third shot drove through the spokes of the staggering wheel. A threatening boulder lying to the right of the wagon's course could not be avoided. The men on the rope jerked and swore. It was useless. One side of the wheel collapsed, the front axle swung sharply around and the blazing wagon straddled the troublesome boulder like a stranded ship. The men guiding heaved to on the rope—the rope parted; the cabin stood safe.

At once, the rifle fire from the cabin ceased. No taunt, no threat could draw another shot from the silence. Chagrined, eyes flashing, silent in his defeat, Van Horn contemplated the last of the burning wagon and watching the cabin as a dog, baffled, watches a cat on a fence, was let alone even by the most reckless of his companions. For the failure no one tried to bait him. Nor were he and Doubleday ready to quit. They got ready a circle of fires to block any attempt made to escape from the beleaguered cabin after dark. This proved a difficult undertaking, both because fuel was scarce and because the dead line, drawn by the rifle fire of the wary defender, extended a long way in every direction around his log refuge.

The night, however, was fairly clear and a pretty good moon was due by 10 o'clock. The fires were lighted, not without some sharp objection from the cabin, the moment darkness fell. The hard part then was to keep them replenished and maintain an adequate guard. Dark spots and shadows fell within and across the circle around the cabin. Van Horn ordered a rifle fire directed into these places; it was placed so steadily that when the moon rose the besiegers felt pretty confident Henry had not escaped. And just before its light had penetrated the narrow valley, the invaders had a cheering surprise when the wounded man, nicknamed "The Snipe," crawled from his hollow between the lines back to his comrades and told them in immoderate terms what he thought of them for leaving him wounded and thirsty under the enemy fire. Volunteers, inspired by his abuse, crawled out to the second man that had fallen in the morning and by really heroic effort got him back into the draw; badly hit, he was given long-needed attention. The first man, shot through the head, the rescuers reported dead.

ONCE IN A NORTHERN TWILIGHT

married. We were fools, both of us, and I've earned a fool's reward."

"Isn't he good to you?"

"Good?" Her laugh concentrated her bitterness. "You've seen what's happened this evening. Well, this is only one of them. For years he's been playing this game, and I've been one of its pawns. I never cared what happened to him, or me, or any one else, until that boy told me tonight that you had never married. Then something I had thought dead came to life again in me—and I burned the paper that Bert had made Leffen sign."

"What will he do to you?"

"What will it matter? What are you doing with your life, Ross?"

"What do any of us do when we've no incentive? Drift along, and pass the time in work."

"Life's pretty much of a mess, isn't it?"

"No," he said slowly. "It's a winding track sometimes, but we come out in the open after awhile."

"We're pretty well into the woods of it now," she said bitterly. Suddenly she flung off restraint. "I can't stand it, Ross," she cried. "I've endured it all these years because I thought you'd failed me and that all men were alike. But I can't go on!"

"You'll have to, for awhile," he told her. "Don't you see what he'll say if you quit now?"

"I don't care what he says."

"You would, some time."

"But you don't know what it is."

"I can guess," he said. As if he dared not linger on the quicksands of her emotion, he veered their talk swiftly.

"Have you known Ted Leffen long?" he asked her. "Long enough to know that he's so loyal and true that his friends try to save him from his one weakness?"

Skillfully he sought to lead away Edith's thoughts from herself while I wondered how I could get away without revealing my unintended eavesdropping, and finally decided upon a bolt through the kitchen and out into the bush back of the clearing. I passed the impassive China boy, who did not even look up from his labors at me, and had gone perhaps two hundred feet through the woods, intending to circle back to the boardwalk a little farther beyond, when I heard the sound of crackling brush and of hurried breathing. I crouched back against a tree, fearful of what might be prowling in the deepening twilight, and I saw Leffen go by, plunging toward the lake. In his hand he held a revolver.

I wanted to cry out, but fear paralyzed my voice. What was he going to do? To kill himself? Or was he seeking for Kendrick? If he had gone to Golden City to get the gun, why had he come back if he were not bent on revenge? Vainly I struggled to call to him, to tell him that Edith Kendrick had wreaked his vengeance by burning the paper which Kendrick had tricked him into signing, but the cry stuck in my throat, and I clung to the tree, panic-stricken, as Leffen pushed on through the tangle of undergrowth. Just as I had driven my will to follow him and taken a faltering footstep I heard another sound to the left, and turned my head to see Kendrick.

Leffen must have seen him at the same time, for he turned swiftly and faced the other man. Dark as it was, I could not see his face, but some quality of surprise in his attitude showed that, if he had been seeking Kendrick, he had found him unexpectedly, after all. Not menacingly, even though he still held the gun in his hand, but directly he came toward him, moving straight across the angle of vision which I held as if I had been chained there. Kendrick waited, motionless, until Leffen had come close to him. Then he spoke quietly.

"It would be a trick you'd do," he said, "to come at me with that when you know I haven't a weapon."

"How do I know it?" Leffen demanded. His voice was weary, not angry, and my first suspicion that he intended self-destruction rushed back over me in such force that I almost welcomed the men's meeting. "If you don't go armed, you should, when you think of the men who must want to kill you."

"What are you going to do?" There was no tremor in Kendrick's voice.

"I'm going to end the job." The boy's tone touched the nadir of despair, and Kendrick caught its import. "I wouldn't do that," he said, with his old lightness in the face of a supreme decision in another life. "There are plenty of mines left at the Missinaibi, and little Letty might take it hard if you left her. She mightn't find any one again as willing to marry her as you've been, you see, and——."

If he were baiting the boy to rouse him from his despair he won his purpose. I have thought since then that Kendrick would have had reason in plenty to dread the sentiment which Leffen's suicide might arouse against him as its direct cause. He must have known that he could not hope to hold the mine, even though he believed the claim to it safe with Edith, in the face of an aroused camp. With Leffen living, he might hope to weather the storm of protest. With Leffen dead, he was condemned before he was tried. With sure skill, therefore, he may have strick the one chord which could have brought Ted Leffen out of his one thought. For the boy, flinging aside the revolver, sprang forward at the older man.

"You'll take that back," he cried hoarsely. "Come on, and we'll fight, man to man!"

The rush of his onslaught caught Kendrick, and he swayed backward, crashing through the brush; but he caught himself with a clutch at Leffen, and managed somehow to release the boy's grip upon him. Then he sprang forward, his hand taloned as if to clutch at Leffen's throat as something suddenly freed me from silence and I gave a cry of terror which I heard resounding through the bush. Leffen turned at the sound and Kendrick took advantage of it to catch him by the shoulders; but the younger man fought himself out of the grasp, and they lunged at each other again.

For a moment I thought that Leffen had triumphed as I saw Kendrick bend far backward, but I knew it for a trick as he swung to one side and evaded the attack. The boy's breathing came heavily and I knew at what a disadvantage his drinking had put him. He was younger, of course, and stronger than Kendrick, but he lacked the older man's litheness and swiftness. His overwhelming seemed so certain that I shouted to Kendrick to cease, but, if he heard my cry, he paid no heed to it.

With the certainty, the inevitability of a machine, he pressed on his antagonist. He did not intend to kill him, I am sure, but he seemed about to crush him with ruthless cruelty. His long hands flickered toward Leffen's throat, and in the dusk he looked more like a blood-mad wildcat than like a man.

From somewhere—it seemed a long distance away—I could hear voices and the sound of people moving. I shouted again in the hope of bringing them near. Kendrick had Leffen by the throat now, and I thought that he was strangling the life out of the boy. They moved soundlessly, except where a twig snapped sometimes under their feet. Once, too, Ted Leffen gave out a gurgling gasp that roused my rage. I leaned down, picking up the gun from the ground.

"Stop it!" I cried to Kendrick, but he must have known that I dared not fire. The sight of the gun, however, must have spurred him into tenser fury, for he kept at his terrible attack with awful pertinacity, grown so bloodthirsty in the battle that he forgot all those considerations which had held him from desire of physical injury to the boy whom he had so grievously wronged in soul. He was mad, I think, from wish to kill the boy when a voice behind me suddenly cut across the silence and a hand reached for the gun which trembled in my hand.

"Let him alone," a voice said, and it was not until she had passed me that I knew Letty Williams, "or I'll kill you."

Something in the timbre of her tone must have penetrated to Kendrick's turbid consciousness, for he snarled back at her some threat of defiance.

"Let him go!" she shouted again, moving nearer to where the two men struggled. Just then I saw how completely the boy was at Kendrick's mercy, with those long fingers closing mercilessly upon his throat. A blinding flash blazed in front of me, a shot went roaring through the bush, and, as the smoke cleared, I saw Kendrick sway and fall, releasing his clutch on Leffen. A man, whom I knew later for Constable, but whom I could not remember at all then, passed me and bent over Kendrick.

"You've killed him," he said to Letty Williams, who stood with the smoking gun in her hand.

"What else could I do?" she cried. "He was killing Ted."

She moved back a pace, threw down the gun, then, without warning, fell unconscious at my feet.

Leffen, dazed and dizzy, stumbled over toward her. "It wasn't her fault," he told me as he bent over the girl. A sudden thought seemed to thrust itself into light in his brain.

"It's my gun," he said. "I was fighting with him over the mine. He tried to kill me, and I drew in self-defense. That's how it happened. Do you understand?" He peered at me pleadingly. "It happened that way, didn't it?"

"We'll have to bring her to," I evaded. I was helping him to lift Letty from the ground when a pocket flashlight thrust a circle of light upon us.

"What's happened?" I heard Stratton's voice, and I saw him with Edith Kendrick above us.

"I killed him," Ted Leffen said.

Edith Kendrick stood quite motionless, peering through the darkness, too overawed by the swiftness of death to realize yet that it had unlocked for her the door of life.

It was Stratton who asked the question she would not. "How?" he demanded of the boy.

"He was choking me. I got at my gun. She saw it." He glared at me as if daring me to tell the truth; but it was not his bravado, but the pathetic, limp helplessness of the girl between us which kept me silent. Stratton turned to me, then saw Constable bending over Kendrick.

"Is he gone?" he asked.

"Yes," said Constable.

He helped Stratton lift Letty Williams from the ground, and the two of them bore her back to the Kendrick house, Ted Leffen walking beside them, and Edith and I following. No one said a word until the men had laid the girl on the veranda couch, and she showed signs of returning consciousness as Ted Leffen worked over her. Then Constable called me aside.

"She killed him," he said, "and the Canadian law won't deal lightly with her."

"But he'll swear he did it."

"And, if she's a witness, she'll break and tell the truth."

"But what can we do?"

"I'm going to take her out tonight," he said. "I'll take my motor boat and run down to the Frederick House crossing. We'll get an engine there to the junction, and take the morning train south. She can stay away till it's all over."

"But Leffen?" I protested.

"There's not much danger for him," he said. "The Porcupine knows Kendrick too well for any regrets."

"But why——," I began, not understanding why he should lie and scheme for the sake of a girl like Letty Williams.

He looked down at her consideringly. "Somewhere in the world," he said with the solemn sadness of a man who has long dwelt with a hidden grief, "I have a daughter who, years ago, ran away from me because I was too hard upon her youth. I have prayed that she has not known paths like these." He nodded toward the moaning girl. "But, for her sake, I try to do what I can to give any girl a chance." He looked at me searchingly. "Will you give testimony for Leffen, as he wants it given?" he asked me. "Or shall I have to stay?"

"I'll give it," I promised.

Hours afterward, when the long northern twilight had sunk into the blackness of the short northern night, Edith Kendrick and I sat on the veranda and looked out on the waters of the lake. The police, summoned by Stratton, had come and gone, taking my story and Ted Leffen's. They had arrested the boy, and Stratton had gone with him.

With too many thoughts crowding in our hearts to allow speech, we brooded in the silence while Kendrick lay dead in the web he had woven. The moon, a glowing ball of gold, rose slowly over the tips of the pines at the edge of the water. It cast a long track of light upon the lake. In its gleam we saw the ribbon of foam in the wake of a motor boat.

To Edith Kendrick it might have brought thought of her beloved sea. To me it brought knowledge that Constable, chief commissioner of the North Country, was helping a storm-beaten girl, fugitive from the justice of his own courts, over the border to the chance of waiting in peace for happiness and Ted Leffen.

HOOSIER FRIEND?

by JACK LAIT

HUMORISTS have held up the rural resident of the sovereign state of Indiana as a by-heck hick, giving him all the appurtenances customary to such—a smart Alec line of bromidic wit, a canny and cunning bush league shrewdness, a passion for politics, and an appetite for wooden nutmegs. Most humorists are from Indiana, and they ought to know.

But bunko steerers, glim (fake eye glass) workers, confidence men, card cheaters, and dice fixer will tell you—without trying to be funny—that the Hoosier is asbestos covered flint that can neither be burned nor pierced.

If there is one fat, centrally situated, populous and prosperous state that the "shills" and "cons" neglect, it is Indiana.

Maximilian Marmaduke Merriweather was thinking somewhat on that slant as he sat in a swiveled easy chair, looking through the window as his train slid through the central and juiciest section of Indiana. He wondered why M. M. Merriweather's destination was Chicago, where he purposed to repose at one of the lakeside hostelries as headquarters in a campaign of exacting tariff from the multitude. Just which game he would select was to be largely decided by fate and circumstances—he was adept at so many—from tip and toss to the Spanish letter.

He had been a college man. Culture and breeding still oozed from his every pore. No, he did not wear gloves in the train. Men who shovel snow with bare hands wear gray silk gloves in Pullmans—no one knows why. But a crook who wanted to get by would scarcely flash this shrieking omen of social overtraining. Merriweather registered true niceness—he wore quiet clothes, he wore quiet expressions, he minded his own business, and he did not call the porter "George," thus establishing himself as neither a war-made profiteer nor a cracker salesman.

He had studied mathematics, sciences, fine arts, literature, and the dead, living, and comatose langauges. He had absorbed the customary rudiments of education intended for the dilettante student. The result was that when he came out of college he was equipped with expensive inclinations, languorous habits, and no way of making a living. He came out of college because his uncle, who had financed his collegiate career, died and left his entire estate to a welfare fund, uncle having been a rugged man who felt that a young man should have plenty of learning and little currency.

Maximilian Marmaduke Merriweather therefore looked about lazily for the inconveniently requisite means of continued existence. In thus looking about his eyes met those of Nippy Leeland, one of the nation's leading wire tappers. Nippy sounded Merriweather, first as a prospect, then as a prospective aid. He saw rapidly that the young chap was a perfect shillable for a high grade clean-up, and he took Merri to luncheon and frankly explained to him the kindergarten simplicity of tapping.

"A sucker is got to have two things to be a successful victim in this work," said Nippy. "He's got to have money and an itch for larceny. Lots of people have money; everybody has larceny. Show me a man with money—or who can raise any—and give me a chance to whisper thirty-eight words in his ear, and he's mine. Now, I'll give you part of him if you hook up with me. What say?"

"What are the thirty-eight words?" asked Merri.

"They are," said Nippy, "as follows:

"'Brother, I got a gag whereby we can cheat the poolrooms out of a fortune. To grab it we need some dough to put up. You furnish the kale, I'll furnish the rest, and we'll split the profit.'"

"Couldn't you leave out the 'brother' and make it thirty-seven?" asked Merri.

"Lord, no. That's the best word in the lot, except 'cheat' and 'fortune.' The word 'brother' gets under a stranger's skin. It hooks him and establishes you. But the word 'cheat' is the sure fire bearcat. I seen your ears prick up at it."

"But," said Merri, "isn't it pretty late in the day to attempt this wire tapping thing? I'm fresh out of college, not supposed to be up in worldly, not to say underworldly, things, but I know—from the joke papers and agricultural journals—that everyone on earth knows the technique of that ancient swindle."

"Everybody knows the technique of matrimony, too," said Nippy. "But men keep on falling for it every day. It's elemental. Down in Palm Beach the sheriff hangs printed signs in every room and in all the lobbies and bath houses, explaining the game to the rich rums. Then we come into those rooms and take them with it. Last year we took the sheriff."

"It must be fascinating," said Merri.

"Sold," said Nippy. "The larceny in your heart is talking. I like your looks and I like your style and ways. If you had any jack you'd be a set-up for the game. Having none, you'll be a wiz on the other end of it—it takes the same natural streaks to bite or be bit. Do you know Robinson Roover?"

"I know him very well," said Merri. "We're members of the same club."

"How? He's an old man. What are you doing in that kind of a club—at your age?"

"Born into it. Come there to luncheon with me tomorrow—I'll introduce you to Roover."

"Manna from above, kiddo—sweet angels sure sent you to me. Here's a fifty on account. Don't be afraid of it—it's clean. I trimmed a bank cashier for it and a few thousands besides."

Nippy and Merri fleeced old man Roover jocundly. Roover, being a dealer in gilt edged securities, accustomed to calculating between winks the potentialities, substantialities, and technicalities of Cæsar's wife bonds; a financier stanch for established customs and soggy with ethics, he smacked his lips at the thrillingly naughty but safe and conservative wire tapping "racket," and came through with goodly thousands on the same day when he was splitting a quarter of a cent in negotiation of Liberty bonds.

Thereafter, of course, Maximilian Marmaduke Merriweather was socially extinct. Being a true blood, Merri felt quite at home without "society," and became a roving lowwayman with Nippy. When that aged shark passed away, Merri followed him to the grave with true sorrow, for Nippy had been a good sort, a philosopher, a psychologist, a smooth operator, and no end of a pal. Years had intervened, and Merriweather, now an accomplished surgeon in many ways of slitting the green appendix from the side of the patient, went it along on his own.

He still had the inborn manner and it helped him to enjoy life, for it let him mingle with folk who did not always raise gooseflesh beneath his linens. It let him in, too, where brash and boisterous tinhorns could not enter, and his clientèle, professionally, was of the better sort. The United States is a large country; one may shear a sap in Bar Harbor and still mingle among clean finger nails and good names in, for example, Pasadena.

Years of sharpshooting had not robbed him of the inherited talents for polite approach and genteel retreat. No penny ante manipulator of loaded drug store dice was Merri. His hands had never been soiled with rough work—take that literally or slangily—and his calling had not turned him into a boor.

Therefore, as he sat in the Pullman and gazed at the acres groaning with overpriced corn and H. C. L. vegetables, cogitating upon the growing wealth of the commonwealth of wealthy common people, no one would have suspected him of being a sniper against society—least of all would John Frint have suspected it, for Frint was so sophisticated that he could tell a burglar the moment he saw the mask on his face and the gun in his hand, and so unsophisticated that he knew nothing about anyone without a make-up.

Merri did not see Frint, but Frint saw Merri—and hailed him.

"Is all the country betwixt here and Chicago bluffy and broke up like this?" he asked.

Merriweather turned his head and in one eyeful, supported by one quick brain exercise, saw and knew that Frint was a farmer, that he had never been very far from home, that he was a natural born victim, and that he was a Hoosier.

A farmer he was, because no one but a farmer would have such a red neck and such muddy shoes and such a watch chain—not even a teamster. He had never been far from home because his home must be near where they were and he did not know the topography of the country; that his home was nearby was certain because he had not been on the train a few minutes before, when Merri had surveyed the car, and Frint must have gotten on at a minor station, logically the station near his home; it was morning, and had Frint ridden from a distance he would have ridden in a sleeper, and the porter would have polished his shoes. Therefore he was a farmer and a Hoosier.

That he was by temperament a predordained victim—that was easy. In the four bits four-in-hand around Frint's throat was a diamond solitaire. The gem was the last absurdity of a series of incongruous effects over his person, arranged as might be expected of an inland simp on a big town holiday. It proved that Frint had strong weaknesses. A farmer with a diamond is the tip off to a "sport" held down by environment. That makes him a pick-up two ways: he is willing to "step" and hasn't had enough practice at it to have gauged its pitfalls.

"No," said Merri. "Farther on we run by some sand dunes, but in the main the approach to Chicago is pretty flat—typical prairie country."

"O," said Frint.

The agricultural tourist moved forward in his chair to be nearer Merri and assailed him with a series of questions. What was a good hotel in Chicago—not too expensive? Could the town be seen in three days? Were the guides at the stockyards free? Did they have any different movies or the same ones that could be seen in Fort Wayne? And so forth.

It was a clear case of a Reuben coming wide-eyed into the big city. Had not Merri been too keen a judge of the natural and the true, he might have for a moment doubted the genuineness of Brother Frint and looked again to see that he was not a clumsy crook disguised to impersonate a son of the soil. But, no; Frint did not say "gosh darn" or "constabule," so he was bona fide.

Merri was not in the habit of shooting game out of season or fishing up undersized suckers. He knew that Frint would have some money about him, because a farmer suspects the city and knows the city will suspect him, so he carries his resources in cash because he doesn't dream that almost any hotel would cash his check with almost unquestioning compliance. Frint could hardly have enough to interest Merri—financially. But he was a Hoosier, a Hoosier farmer, and as such he interested Merri academically. The accomplished confidence man had heard said so often that Indiana "finks" were invulnerable. He longed, as a prank and an experiment, to "nick" this husbandman for at least his malapropos diamond.

He shot a query or two and found that Frint had neither friend nor kin in the big burg, that he was ready and even somewhat itchy to engage in mischief, and that he was a widower who had collected a few thousand in insurance and was seeking the diversions of the incandescents to console his sorrows. It couldn't have been more nearly perfect if a playwright with talent for obvious situations had framed it. Through Merri's memory ran the passage which the late Nippy had given him—he had never forgotten it. Concealing a smile by sheer art, Merri leaned forward and whispered significantly:

"Brother, I got a gag whereby——"

"Look at them oil tanks!" exclaimed Frint. The train was passing a collection of mammoth crude oil containers. "By Jericho—there must be close onto a million of gallon in them, huh?"

"Brother, I got a gag whereby we can cheat the poolrooms——"

"Poolrooms? They had one o' them in our town, but the village council run it out. The young boys got to playin' pool for money, an' the parson took it up."

Merri paused. Here was a bender—the rules were lost on him. He knew not the meaning of a poolroom, the magic word "cheat" exercised no charm. There was but one catchword left:

"Yes, brother—cheat the bookmakers out of a fortune!"

He might know what bookmakers were. And Nippy had said "fortune" was irresistible as love itself.

"O, you're in the book business? My wife had a cousin in Muncie. He was in the book business—telephone books. Did you say cheap bookmakers made fortunes? Her cousin never made no fortunes. Maybe the books wasn't cheap enough—though, come to think it over, he give 'em away. Couldn't be much cheaper than that, friend. Hee-hee. Holy hick'ry nuts! Look at them two bridges. Why, they ain't fifty yards apart, an' there's two of 'em!"

"Do you ever gamble?" asked Merri, getting it down to the unsubtle come-on of the primary grade steerer.

"Play seven up, but ain't no great shucks at it. I guess we're pretty near there now, anyhow, or I'd try you a hand. I wouldn't play for money, though. One o' the boys in our county met a feller on a train, an' the feller was a slicker—hornswoggled him out o' seven dollars. Man! Look at that cement works. Ain't that some whopper?"

Merri winced.

"Where do you put up at in Chicago?" asked Frint.

Merri named a hotel—the toppiest.

"Never heard of it. What do they set you back?"

"It depends—from $5 to $25."

"Well, a fiver ain't so bad for a week's board. Does meals go with it?"

"Yes," said Merri, now more than annoyed—really angry. "You go there when you get off. Take a bus and tell the driver to take you to that hotel and be sure to tell the clerk you want one of those $5 a week rooms with bath and meals included. He'll tell you they haven't any. Don't you be a rube—don't you let him get away with it. They just try to hold you up for the more expensive ones. Raise a row. Tell him you're no hayseed.

"When you get established and comfortable in your room, I'll come to see you, and I'll take you out and introduce you to a couple of chorus girl friends of mine. They'll be tickled pink to meet you. And after the show we'll take in the cabarets. I have some rare old liquor, so that's taken care of, and I'll have a car at my disposal. Is that satisfactory?"

"Great," said Frint. "Geewhillikens. You suppose them chorus gals'll know that I'm a farmer?"

"They'll never suspect it. I know I won't tell them. I'll pass you off as a New York financier on his way to Japan to loan the slit-eyes a few million. Now, don't you make a fool of me and tell them different."

"I'll be mum. Say, it won't cost me much, will it?"

"Not a cent. You are my guest."

"That's fine. Why're you so obligin' to me, though?"

"Because I like you," said Merri heartily. "I took to you from the first. During your stay consider yourself under my wing. I'll keep you dizzy with pleasures."

"But I got to see them stockyards—you got to squeeze that in somewheres."

"Sure," choked Merri. "Now I'm going forward. But look me up at the hotel—brother!"

And that was why Maximilian Marmaduke Merriweather changed hotels. And if you have followed this tale at all you will know why he never again called a Hoosier farmer "brother."

"No," and went on with an impatient comment of her own: "You're always asking questions. What for? That's what I want to know."

John laid his cigarette on the rim of his plate and appealed to Kate. "Did you ever in your life see a more unreasonable woman than Belle? How am I to find things out without asking questions of my friends? And among them I number you both," he added.

Leaning forward, he spoke on: "Now, I'll tell you why I asked those harmless little questions—for I wouldn't ask either of you any other kind. This news will get to each of you about evening. By morning it will be all over Sleepy Cat, and by tomorrow noon across the Spanish Sinks. This morning, early, Van Horn, Tom Stone, Pettigrew, with Bradley and a bunch of Texas men and cowboys, rode over into the Falling Wall country, and there's been hell to pay there every minute since daylight—that's the word I got about half an hour ago, by telephone, from a little ranch away up on the head-waters of the Crazy Woman."

He drew his handkerchief and wiped his brow. "The only man up there—Belle knows that—that I'm any ways interested in is Jim Laramie. According to what I can hear, Jim is home. That's worrying me just a little.

"What will Jim do? That's what I'm thinking of. How will he stack up if that bunch goes to his ranch on the Turkey? He hates 'em like poison. They've gone up there, you understand," he added, speaking to Kate, as if some further explanation were due a comparative stranger, "to clean out the rustlers. You can imagine it'll be done—or at least attempted—without much talk. I've known for some little time what's been going forward. They tried to get Jim to join them; offered him about anything he wanted; offered to see that the contests on his preëmption and homestead be withdrawn; offered him quite a bunch of cattle, I heard, and some money."

"And," John added, "that was hatched mostly right at your place. And they rode away from there about two o'clock this morning. That's why I was pumping you a little, till I see you didn't know a thing about it."

Why Kate had not asked before she could not tell, but the possibility never crossed her mind—until Lefever told her of their starting from the ranch that morning—that her father might have gone. She recollected now she had not seen him, as she usually saw him, the first thing when she came from her room. Her heart leaped into her throat. "Was my father with them?" she asked.

She must have shown her excitement and fear in her manner, as well as in her words, for Lefever looked at her considerately. "According to my reports," he answered carefully, "your father was with them."

"Godfrey!" muttered Belle. Kate could say nothing.

Against the alert the effective blow is a sudden blow. Secrecy and a surprise were the only hope of success in what the cattlemen were now attempting in the Falling Wall. Of the men whom they could count on to organize and carry through such a raid they had just one capable of energizing every detail—Harry Van Horn. Laramie, the man Doubleday and Pettigrew would have chosen, they had failed to enlist. But Doubleday in especial was not a man to lose time over failure. He knew that Van Horn had "go" enough in him to clean out a whole country if he were given the men and backing, and that he stood high in the councils of the range. When Van Horn spoke men listened. His eye flashed with his words and his long, straight hair shook defiance at opposition. When once started, mercy was not in him.

In the Falling Wall park there lived but a handful of men, and these widely scattered, but Van Horn was the last man to underestimate the handful he was after. He knew them every one, and knew that no better men ever rode the range than Stormy Gorman, Dutch Henry, Yankee Robinson, and Dave Hawk, and their associates—if, indeed, for a man who never mixed with other men, Hawk could be said to have associates.

But these four named were the men to whom the lesser rustlers of the park looked, the men whose exploits they imitated, and these were the men on whose heads a price had, in effect, been set.

Van Horn assembled his men earlier than Lefever had been told. An old trail from Doubleday's ranch to the Falling Wall crosses the road to the fort some miles north of Sleepy Cat. The party from the ranch—Tom Stone, with some of the most reckless cowboys and Doubleday—waited there for the Texans whom Van Horn was bringing from Pettigrew's. Both parties were at the rendezvous that night by twelve o'clock, and within thirty minutes were headed north by way of the Crazy Woman for Falling Wall park.

Dawn was whitening the eastern sky when the raiding party halted near a clump of trees on the south fork of the Turkey. The valley into which they had ridden during the night was very broken, but offered good grazing. Along the tortuous water course Stormy Gorman, the old prize fighter, and Dutch Henry, the ex-soldier, had preëmpted two of the very few pieces of land that did not stand directly on edge and built cabins for themselves. Gorman's cabin lay a mile above the fork where the raiders had halted; Henry's lay a few miles further up the creek.

During the long night ride it had been decided to strike at Gorman's ranch first; thence to follow the creek trail up to Dutch Henry's, dispatch him in turn, to cross rapidly a narrow rough divide beyond which they could reach Hawk's cabin on the east fork of the Turkey, and thence sweep into the northwest to clean out the smaller fry—the "chicken feed" rustlers, as Van Horn called them. But toward morning, following much wrangling between Stone and Van Horn, the tactics were changed. It was decided to go after Dutch Henry first—as the more alert and slippery of the two—and as quietly as possible the now silent invaders rode slowly along the creek past Gorman's place up to Henry's.

Day was breaking when the riders, dismounting and leaving their horses on the creek bottom, crept noiselessly, under Stone's guidance, up a wash to the bench on which Henry's cabin stood. Hiding just below the shallow bank at the head of a draw, they lay awaiting developments. Where Stone had posted them they commanded the cabin perfectly.

They had hardly disposed of themselves in this manner, and were beginning to distinguish, in the gray dusk, objects with some certainty, when the door of the distant cabin opened and a mongrel collie bounded out, followed by a man who left the door half open behind him. The man, carrying a water pail, set it down, yawned, stretched himself, and tucked his shirt slowly inside his trousers. Wild with joy, the dog danced, leaped, and barked about his master—only to be rewarded by a kick that sent him yelping to a little distance, where, turning, crouching with extended paws, whining and frantically wagging his tail, the poor beast tried to beg forgiveness for its half-starved happiness. The man, giving this demonstration no heed, picked up the pail and started for the creek.

His path took him in a direction roughly parallel to the line along which his hidden enemy lay.

"Don't fire at that man," muttered Van Horn to his companions under cover of the draw. "That's not Dutch Henry," he whispered the next moment. "Don't fire. I'll take care of him."

The rustler, quite unconscious of his deadly danger, tramped unevenly on. His dog, no longer repulsed, dashed joyously back and forth, scenting the trails of the night and barking wildly at his master by turns. The man was walking hardly 300 yards from where Stone, rifle in hand, lay, and had reached the footpath leading from the bench to the creek bottom when Stone, half rising, covered him slowly with point blank sights. In the path ahead the dog had struck a fresh gopher hole, and, still yelping, was pawing madly into it when a rifle cracked. The man with the pail, swung violently half around by the shock of a spreading bullet, jerked convulsively, and the pail flew clattering from his hand. He struggled an instant to keep his footing, then, falling into the path, lay quite still.

Stone, followed by a man nearest him, scrambling down the draw, hurried along the creek bottom and ran up to reach the path across which the murdered man lay. The dog, barking and dashing wildly around his prostrate master, spied the foreman and sprang madly down the trail at him. Stone, rifle in one hand and revolver in the other, was ready, and, firing from the hip, broke the collie's back. With a howl the stricken brute turned, and, dragging his helpless hind quarters along the ground with incredible swiftness, pawed himself back to the dying man's head, and, yelping, licked frantically at the hand of his master. Coming up into plain sight, Stone got a good look at the man he had killed.

"Gorman!" he exclaimed, with an oath of surprise. "Who'd a thought," he continued, with many expletives, "that old bum would be up at Dutch Henry's this morning!"

The old prize fighter was struggling in his last round. His heavy lidded eyes, swollen with drink and sleep, were closed, and from his mouth, as his head hung to one side, a dark stream ran to a little pool in the dust. Only a stertorous breathing showed his effort to live, and even this was failing fast. Van Horn hurried up the path from the bottom, whither he had followed Stone. Anger was all over his face. "Kill that damned dog!" he exclaimed, out of breath, to those about him. Two of the three men drew revolvers and shot the collie through the head.

"Damnation!" cried Van Horn in a fury, "Stop your shooting! Couldn't you knock him in the head? Do you want to start up the whole country?" he demanded, as he saw the man who lay at his feet and had taken the brief count for eternity was Gorman. He turned on Stone with rage in his eyes and his voice.

"Now," he cried, punctuating his abuse with the fiercest gestures, "you've done it, haven't you, you——!" Anger almost choked him. "You've got Gorman with a brass band and left Dutch Henry in the cabin waiting for us, haven't you? Why," he roared profanely, "didn't you obey orders, let this tank get down to the bottom, and knock him on the head into the creek?"

A violent recrimination between Stone and Van Horn followed. But the milk was spilt, as well as the blood of the stubborn rustler, and there was nothing for it but new dispositions.

Gorman's presence indicated that Henry was at home. If he were at home, he was, no doubt, within the cabin; but just how, after Stone's blunder, to get at him was a vexing question.

Van Horn started down the foot trail back to the bottom and around to the first hiding place. Lingering with a companion to look at Gorman in his blood, Stone turned on his companion for approval. "See where I hit him?" he grinned. "Poor light, too."

A brief council was held in the draw. Watched for more than an hour, not the slightest sign of life about the lonely cabin could be detected. Various expedients, none of them very novel, were tried to draw Henry's fire if he should be within. But these were of no avail. A dozen theories were advanced as to where Henry might or might not be. But to every appearance there was not, so far as the enemy could judge, a living man within miles of the spot. The older heads—Pettigrew, Doubleday, Van Horn, even Stone—talked less than the others; but they were by no means convinced that the house was empty.

One of the least patient of the cowboys at length deliberately exposed himself to fire from the sphinx-like cabin. He stood up and walked up and down the edge of the draw. Nothing happened. Emboldened, he started out into the open and toward the cabin. No shot greeted him. A companion, jumping up, hurried after him; a third Texas boy sprang up, to join them. For those watching from hiding it was a ticklish moment. Toward the draw there was a considerable growth of mountain blue-stem, none of it very high and gradually shortening toward the house. The three men were hastening through the grass, separated by intervals of perhaps fifty feet. The foremost got within a hundred yards of the cabin door, which still stood open as Gorman had left it, before Van Horn's fear of an ambush vanished. He himself, not to be too far behind his followers, then rose to join the procession through the blue stem and the crack of rifle was heard. Van Horn, unhurt, with shout of warning, dropped instantly into the draw. But the last man of the three in the field fell as if struck by an ax. Of the two men ahead of him, the hindermost dropped into the grass and crawled snakelike back for the draw; the man in front dropped his rifle and started at top speed for safety; from the edge of the draw his companions sent a fusillade of rifle fire at the cabin.

Apparently the diversion had no effect on the man inside. With instant deliberation, he fired again; this time at the Texan crawling in the blue stem, and the half-hidden man, almost lifted from the ground by the blow of the bullet, dropped limp. Meantime the first cowboy in his dash for safety was making a record, still unequaled in mountain story. He jumped like a broncho and rig-zagged like a darting bird, but faster than either. The efforts of his companions to divert attention from him were constant. Some of them poured bullets at the cabin. Others jumped to their feet, and, yelling, sprang from point to point to expose themselves momentarily and draw the fire of the enemy. This was of no avail. The hidden rifle with deliberate instancy cracked again. The fleeing cowboy, slammed as if with a club, dashed on, but his right arm hung limp. No snipe ever made half the race for life that he put up in those fleeting seconds, and by his agility he earned then and there the nickname of the bird itself; for before the deadly sights could cover his flight again he threw himself into a slight depression that effectually hid him from the range of the enemy.

A swarm of hornets, roused, could not have been more furious than the company under the lea of the draw. Shooting, shouting, cursing deep and loud, they made continual effort to keep the deadly fire off their fallen companions. They saw the half-open door of the cabin swing now slowly shut and they riddled it with bullets. They splintered the logs about it and scattering in as wide an arc as they dared they continued to pour a fire into the silent cabin. Times they paused to wait for a return. There was no return. All ruses they had ever heard of they tried over again to draw a fire and exhaust the besieged man's ammunition. Nothing moved the lone enemy—if he were indeed lone. The day wore into afternoon. By shouting, the assailants learned that two of their three hapless companions lying in the blue stem were alive—the Snipe very much alive as his stentorian answers indicated. He called vigorously for water, but got none. His refuge was too exposed.

How to get rid of Dutch Henry taxed the wits of the invaders. The whole morning and the early afternoon went to pot-luck firing from the trench along the draw, but although it was often asserted that Henry must be long since dead—having returned none of the shooting that was meant to call his fire—no one manifested the curiosity necessary to prove the assertion by closing in on the cabin. Stone was still sulking over Van Horn's sharp talk of the morning when Van Horn came over to where the foreman had posted himself to cover the cabin door:

"We've got to get that guy before dark, Tom, or he'll slip us."

"All right," replied Stone, with a string of oaths; "you get him."

"I want a wagon," retorted Van Horn. "There's one down at Gorman's place he won't need any more. There's some baled hay down there, too. Take what men you need, load what hay you can find on the wagon and hustle it up here."

Too stubborn to ask questions and only starting after many more hard words—with which all the ground of the morning quarrel and much more was traversed—Stone took two men and started reluctantly for Gorman's. He spent a long time on his job, but came back with the wagon as directed, loaded with hay.

The wagon was not much to view. It looked like the wagon of a man that spent more time in Sleepy Cat saloons than on his ranch. A rack, equally old and dilapidated, had been set on the running gear. The paint had long since blown off the wheels, and one of these, a front wheel, had lost a tire on the rough trip up the creek. But the felloe hung to the spokes and the spokes to the hub.

Van Horn inspected the outfit grimly. With half a dozen men he set quickly to work and under his resourceful ingenuity the wagon and hay were speedily turned into what would nowadays be termed a tank. Only lack of hay kept him from making a mobile fortress of it. By means of wire he slung what baled hay he could spare along the sides, and with much effort to avoid exposure the armored wagon was dragged over the roughest kind of ground, to the north and west of the cabin. From this direction the ground, fairly smooth, sloped from a ridge fringed by a jutting patch of rock, directly toward the cabin itself and eager hands made the final preparations to smoke Henry out. With the load of hay set ablaze and the wagon run down against the cabin the defender was bound to be driven out or burnt.

When the bustling, contradicting and confusion finally subsided, the wagon was stealthily pushed over the ridge, the hay fired and the blazing outfit, christened a go-devil, was started with a shout down the slope for the cabin.

If there existed in the minds of those who talked least a lingering suspicion that Dutch Henry was still alive it was soon strongly justified. Before the wagon had rolled twenty feet the challenge of a rifle shot from the cabin answered the attack. Everybody dodged quick, but no one was hit and a yell of derision rose from behind the rocks. With ropes borrowed from the men that carried them, and knotted together, the wagon was kept under partial control and the rope, as it was paid out, served in some measure to guide it. On it went, accom-

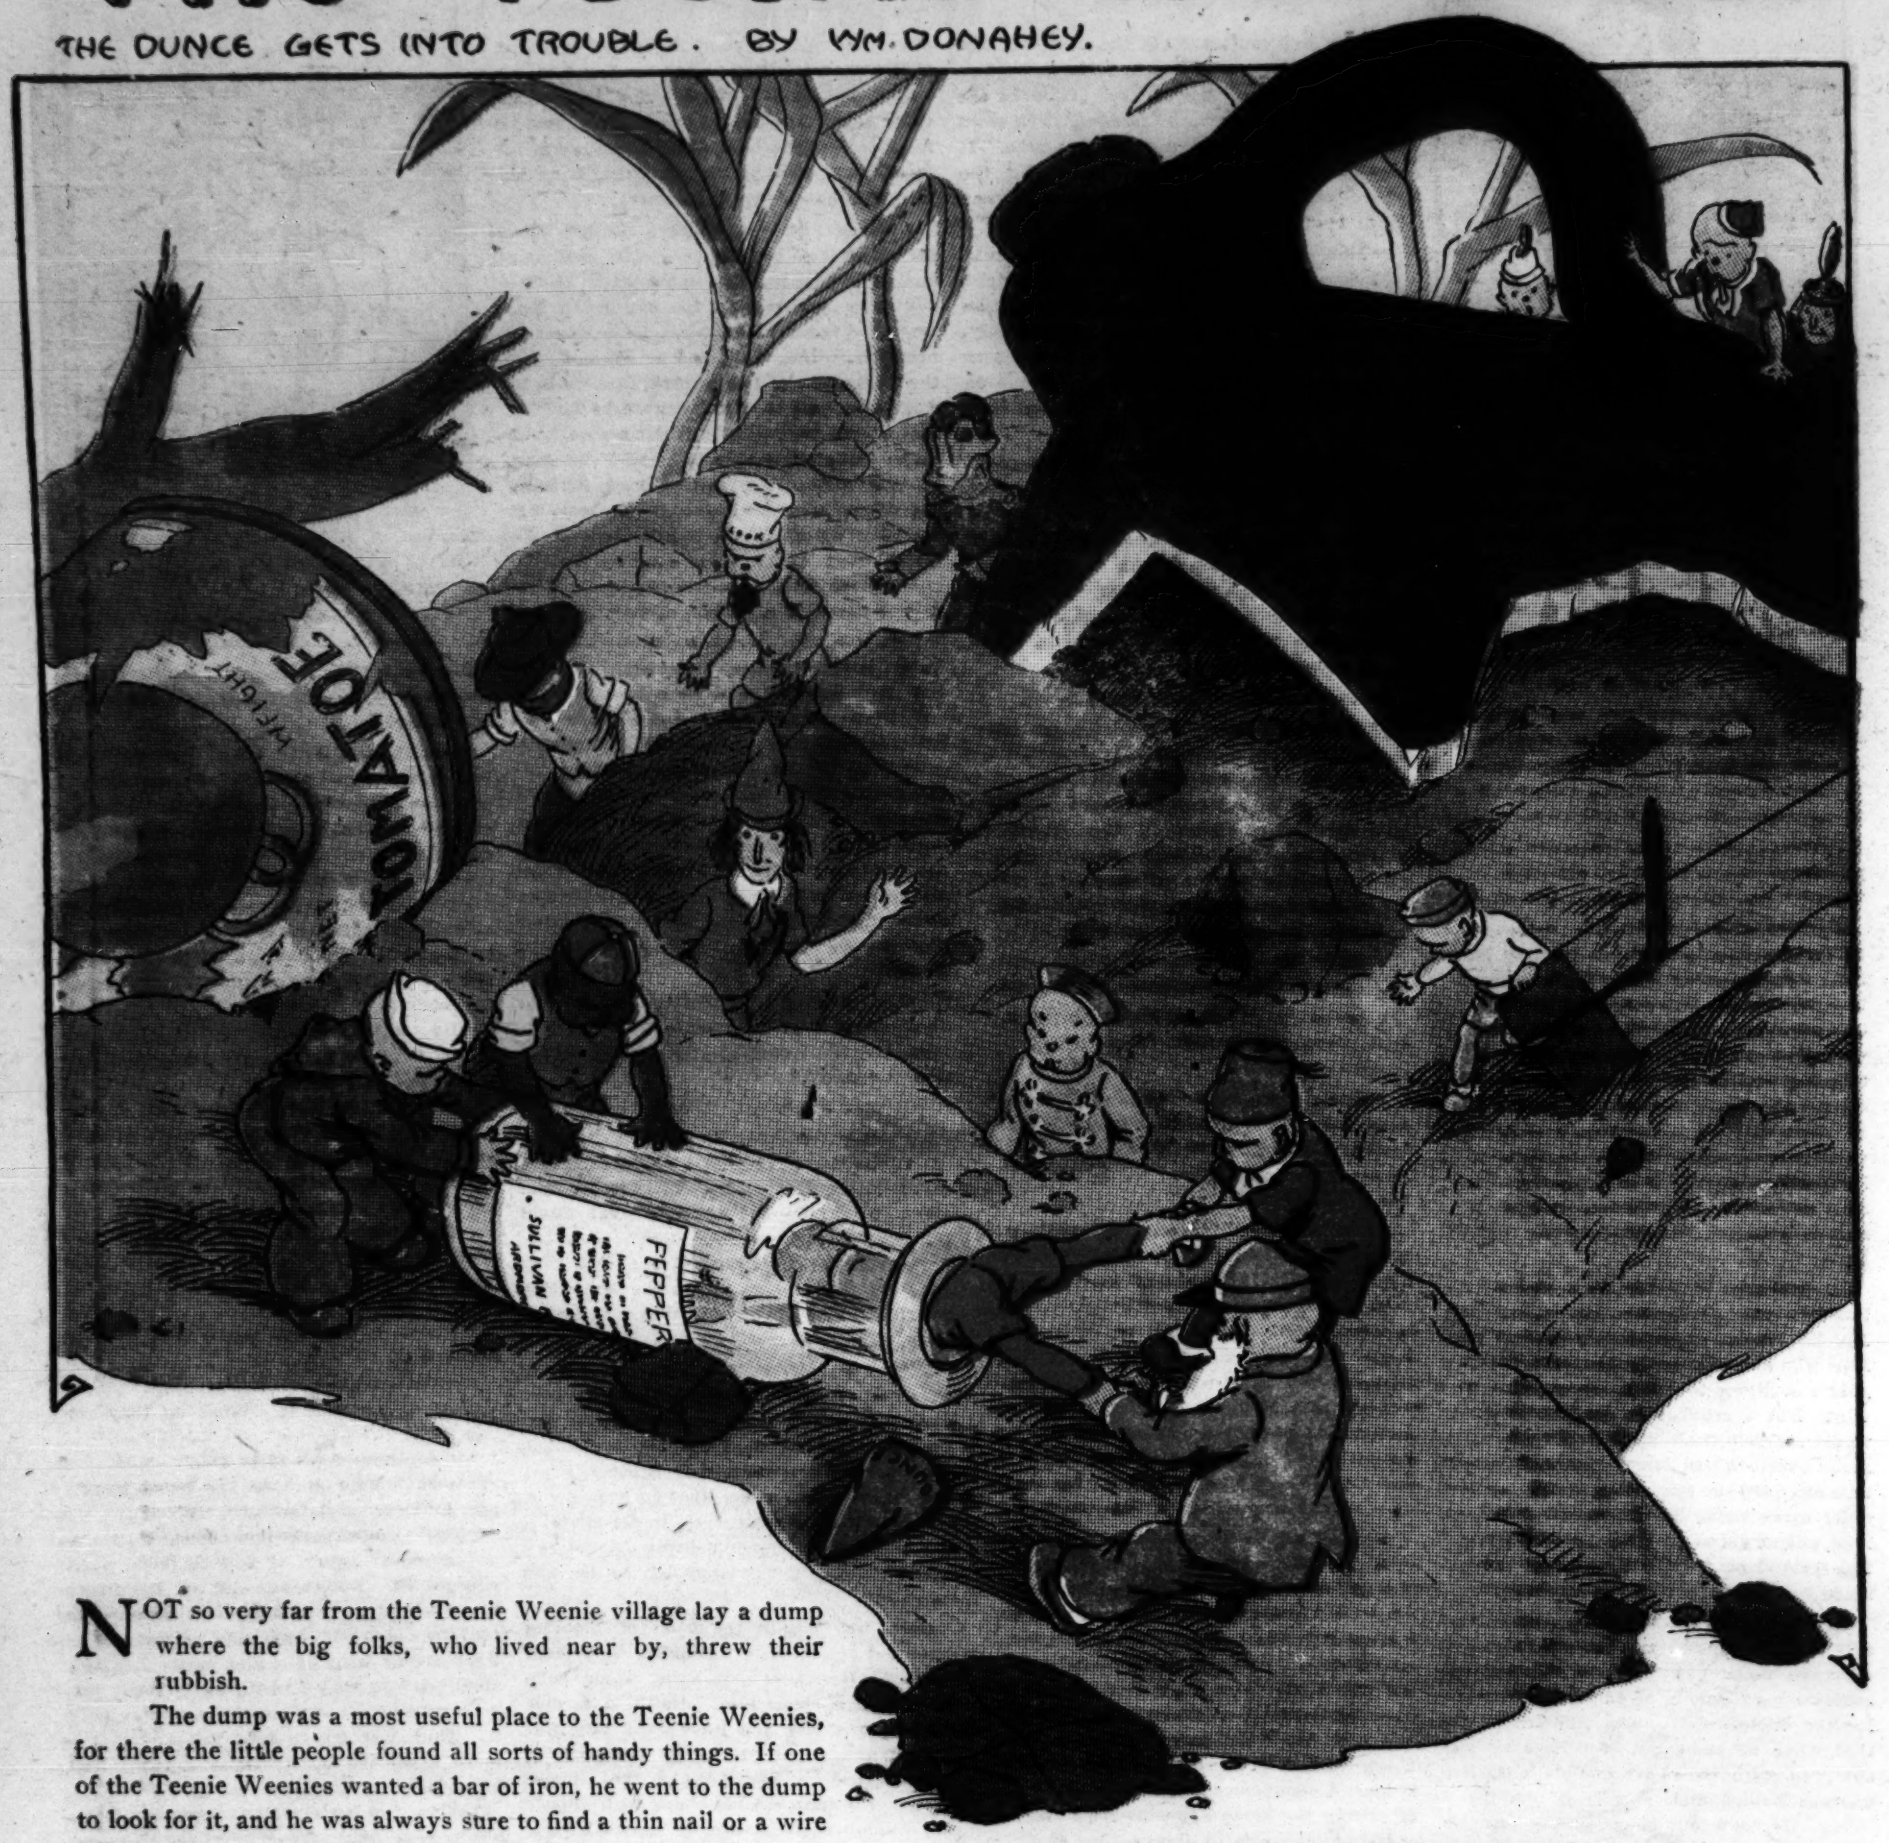
THE TEENIE WEENIES.

THE DUNCE GETS INTO TROUBLE. BY WM. DONAHEY.



NOT so very far from the Teenie Weenie village lay a dump where the big folks, who lived near by, threw their rubbish.

The dump was a most useful place to the Teenie Weenies, for there the little people found all sorts of handy things. If one of the Teenie Weenies wanted a bar of iron, he went to the dump to look for it, and he was always sure to find a thin nail or a wire hairpin, which would answer the purpose.

In fact, the little people found almost everything they needed there, and they always loved to look over every basketful of rubbish which was thrown out.

One morning the Dunce learned from Tilly Titter, the English sparrow, that a man had thrown out a lot of rubbish, and he asked the Chinaman to go with him to the dump.

"Come on, Chuck, we may find a glass marble like the Scotchman found once," argued the Dunce.

"Allie same marble him much too heavy to clarry back. Me don't want marble much enough to clarry clear back home," said the Chinaman.

"Well, come on and go anyhow," coaxed the Dunce.

"Allie light, me glow," agreed the Chinaman, and closing the laundry door to keep out any stray bug that might happen along, he ran after the Dunce who had already set off towards the dump.

In a short time the little fellows arrived at the dump, and climbing up the steep side they soon began examining the rubbish which had been left there that morning.

"Jinks!" exclaimed the Dunce, pointing towards a small bottle, which lay near an old tomato can. "There's a dandy bottle that would be just the thing for the Cook to put strawberry jam in," and bending over he peered through the opening.

"Smells like peppermint. Blamed if it isn't peppermint," he cried as he glanced at the label on the side of the bottle. "I'm goin' to crawl in and get a lick."

The Dunce threw off his hat, and putting his head into the neck of the bottle he began wiggling in.

The fat little Dunce was a pretty tight fit for the neck of the bottle but after much squirming and wiggling the little fellow managed to dip his finger into the few drops of peppermint that lay in the bottom of the bottle.

The peppermint was much too strong to suit the Dunce's taste, and when the little fellow tried to push himself out of the bottle he found that he was stuck fast.

The Chinaman could just hear the Dunce's voice calling for help, and catching up one of the foolish fellow's legs the little man tried to pull his friend out.

"Me glow get help!" shouted the Chinaman when he found he could not pull the Dunce out of the bottle, and the little chap set off for the shoe house with all his speed.

"Click! Dunce like cork. Much stuck in bottle. Come click," cried the little Chinaman as he dashed up to the shoe house where some of the Teenie Weenies were standing.

Several of the Teenie Weenies followed the Chinaman to the dump where they set to work trying to free the foolish Dunce.

Two Teenie Weenies held the bottle while the Old Soldier and the Turk pulled at the Dunce's legs, but the harder they pulled the tighter the Dunce seemed to stick.

"Get the Doctor," shouted the Cowboy.

"We don't need a doctor," growled the Turk. "What we need is an ax to bust the bottle with."

"It wouldn't do to break the bottle," cried the Old Soldier. "Some of the glass might cut the Dunce. We'd better try and pull him out."

The little men set to work again and after much twisting and pulling the Dunce was finally freed.

The Dunce was not hurt by his experience, but he was teased a great deal by the rest of the Teenie Weenies, and for many days his friends called him the "human cork."

"We've got to get that guy before dark, Tom, or he'll slip us."

THE STORY.

KATE DOUBLEDAY has journeyed to the far west to visit her father,

BARB DOUBLEDAY, who deserted her mother years before, and whom the girl has never seen. This strange father she finds engaged in certain dubious enterprises which he does not see fit to explain, but he shows a furtive affection for the girl and establishes her in a cottage at Sleepy Cat Junction with

BELLE STOCKLEY, a woman of the neighborhood whom he has engaged to run his eating house in town. Kate hears mystifying references to her father's affairs from

HARRY VAN HORN, a dashing cattleman, whom she likes, and

TOM STONE, foreman at Doubleday's ranch, whom she does not like at all. Also she hears much talk of one

JIM LARAMIE about whose character there seem to be sharp differences of opinion. Laramie, she gathers, is a figure of some importance in a war which is being waged between cattle thieves and the big ranch owners of the country. One day at the eating house, meeting a stranger whom she believes to be a marshal with papers to serve on her father, Kate lures him away into the plains on the pretext of taking a ride with her, only to find to her chagrin that the man is not a marshal at all but Jim Laramie himself. Subsequently she learns that the real marshal is a man named

JOHN LEFEVER, a likable character who has been maintaining an impartial attitude in the cattle wars. Soon after Kate's first encounter with Laramie, Doubleday closes his eating house at Sleepy Cat Junction and the girl goes to her father's ranch. She tries to avoid Laramie, but meets him on several occasions and, in spite of herself, begins to be interested in him. Meanwhile Laramie has been approached by men from the Doubleday outfit with a proposal that he line up with them in the feuds that are under way. This he refuses to do, but Doubleday is persistent, and when a big Fourth of July celebration is staged at his ranch he succeeds in getting Laramie and others from the Falling Wall country, where Laramie lives, to be present. There are riding and shooting contests, and Laramie is persuaded to try his skill at shooting from horseback.

SIXTH INSTALLMENT.

The Raid of the Falling Wall.

ON a stretch of the trail extending along the creek, John Frying Pan, under the direction of Sawdy and Van Horn, was placing at intervals of from fifty to one hundred and fifty yards a series of targets. These were ordinary potatoes, but selected with great care as to size and shape by the man whose money was up—Sawdy. Frying Pan's work was to impale them on low-growing scrub along the trail to serve as targets. Against these targets—six in number—Laramie was to undertake to ride and to split five out of the six as he galloped past them with six and no more bullets. The potatoes were up when Laramie joined Sawdy, and Lefever, with leather lungs, announced the terms of the test. Accompanied by Sawdy, Van Horn, and Frying Pan, Laramie rode slowly down the course—a quarter of a mile long—examining the roadway and the targets. Here and there a loose stone was removed from the trail; one potato was moved from a dip in the course to a safer point; one was raised, and one placed more clearly in sight.

Having ridden to the end, Laramie expressed himself as satisfied with the conditions. Alone, he went back over the course and, starting down the creek, made a trial heat at full speed past the targets. One of these, at his request, was shifted again. While he watched this change Sawdy and Lefever, surrounded by their followers, were crowding him as race touts crowd a favorite jockey with the final words of admonition and advice. When the target was adjusted Laramie, breaking away from everybody, returned alone to the starting point. Dismounting, and taking his time to everything, he again tested his cinches, drew his gun from its holster and, breaking it, slipped a sixth cartridge into the cylinder. Slipping the gun back into place, he pulled his hat a little lower, glanced down the course and up toward the little hill on which he had parted from Kate. She was standing where he left her, but Van Horn had ridden up and was talking to her. While she listened to him she watched the preparations below.

Laramie spoke to his pony, patted him on the neck, and mounted. Wheeling, he swung out into a wide circle across the level bench and, with gradually increasing speed, into a measured gallop. Molded into one flesh with his mount, Laramie, impassive in the saddle as a statue, watched and nursed to his liking the pony's gait. When the rhythm suited he urged the horse to a longer stride and, circling back into the course, drew his gun, held it high in the air and, swinging it slowly like a lariat, bore down full tilt on the first target.

Markers for both sides in the betting stood to watch each potato. No signal would mean the potato had been missed; for each hit a hat was to be thrown into the air. In a complete silence among the spectators every eye was fixed on the now speeding horseman. Those close at hand saw him, with his left arm still high in the air, sway slightly backward and slowly forward while, with the circling gun poised at arm's length, he shrank closer and lower into the saddle. When he neared the first target, throwing his left arm toward it like a bolt, he fired, sped on, and was again swinging his gun. He had hardly covered six more paces before a hat was tossed into the air behind him.

A yell went up from his friends. Horsemen wheeled into the course behind the flying marksman. With five potatoes still to negotiate, they were afraid to cheer. But as one hat after another along the shooting line—the second, the third, and the fourth—was tossed up from the target behind the speeding horseman the Sleepy Cat men bellowed with joyful confidence. The fifth target was of unusual distance—a hundred and fifty yards—from the fourth. Leaving the fourth Laramie's horse broke, and the onlookers saw his rider was in trouble. He kept the swing of his gun without breaking the rhythm, but his efforts were in his bridle arm to steady his horse.

The hopes of his backers fell as they saw how stubborn the pony had become. The hundred and fifty yards were barely enough to bring him under control. Laramie, still circling his raised gun, did bring him under. But he was already nearing the fifth target. And, to the horror of his friends, he passed it without attempting to fire.

Of the two chances left him to tie—which meant to win—he had passed up one; the sixth and last meant life or death to the shaken hopes of his friends.

They saw him settled once more into the long, even stride he needed for the shot, and their breaths hung on each flying leap that brought the rider nearer his last chance. The sixth target was separated by barely fifty yards from the fifth. Laramie had covered half the distance when he completely reversed his form. He stretched gradually up in the saddle and, riding close in on the target itself, rose to his full height in the stirrups and smashed his fifth shot almost straight down on it; the potato split into a dozen fragments. Bill Bradley at the sixth was watching for Sawdy; his hat sailed twenty feet in the air. The yelling crowd rode Laramie down as he galloped in a long circle back, his lines swung on his forearm while he slipped four fresh cartridges into the warm cylinder of his revolver.

He dismounted to ease his cinches. "I guess I overdid it," he explained to the friends that crowded closest. "I got the cinches a little tight. The pony didn't like it. I couldn't get the gait in time for the Number Five. I knew I could make Number Six. That won for you, didn't it?"

Remounting, he made his way through the crowd back over the course. Kate was still on the hill. "You won, didn't you?" she cried as he rode toward her.

"If I hadn't I'd have had to head straight across the creek for home. Could you see?"

"I watched you the whole way. What a long arm you have!"

"While these tinhorns are counting their money would you like to show me the ponies?"

"You have a long memory, too."

"I was brought up a good deal with Indians. Shall I hunt up Van Horn to go with us?"

She darted a quick glance at him. "Why, yes, surely," she retorted, "if you want him."

Laramie was tearing out a cigarette paper. "I could look at them without him," he returned calmly.

"I don't see him, anyway," murmured Kate, professing to sweep the crowded course with her eyes.

"Don't look too hard," cautioned Laramie.

"I suppose we might save time," she suggested, ignoring his last remark, "by going without him."

Those closest to headquarters sometimes know least of what is going on. That the big celebration at the ranch could have been anything more or less than what it professed to be did not occur to Kate; nor could any one actually say that it was more or less. Hawk could contemptuously refuse its overtures; Laramie could, for reasons of his own, accept them; the Falling Wall rustlers were out for a good time or they would not have been rustling, and they would celebrate any time at anybody's expense—except their own; Carpy could believe it was to usher in a better feeling—every one to his taste.

But the suspicious, because they did not quite understand such a move, harbored their suspicions, and among the doubting was Belle Shockley—shrewd and very much alive to the drift of things since her struggle with a cyclone. Had Belle, instead of Kate, been out at the ranch, things now coming along that Kate failed to see would have told volumes to her.

But Kate did not feel at liberty to make of Belle a confidante in everything—certainly not in what transpired at the ranch; so she neither said anything to Belle nor asked of her any explanation of things she did not understand at home—such as guarded and more frequent consultations between her father, Van Horn, Pettigrew, and Stone; and such as men riding up with a clatter to the ranch-house at night and calling Doubleday out and calling for Van Horn, who often now spent the night at the ranch and left before daybreak.

Whenever Kate was in Sleepy Cat Belle was inquisitive. She always wanted to know what Van Horn was doing, what her father was doing, and then fell back on vaguely general questions about ranches and the range and rustlers. More than once she spoke of strangers in town, Texas men—cowboys and gunmen, she called them—who bothered her for meals and whom she scornfully sent packing.

And Henry Sawdy, too, one of her frequent visitors, was trying to court her, she complained; all this made her suspicious. Of whom? Of what? Kate asked. Belle could not tell exactly of whom, of what—she was just suspicious. "Why should that big fat man come courting me?" she demanded one day when Kate had come in for lunch.

"You don't think it possible he likes you?" suggested Kate, barely glancing Belle's way and taking care to make her tone very skeptical. Belle only snorted contemptuously and turned to the dinner she was cooking; but as she did so she gave her wig a punch.

By the merest chance John Lefever came in a few minutes later. Belle and Kate were at the table, and he had to be asked to share the lunch, which he did with relish, paying his way with his usual foolery of overflowing good nature. When the plates were emptied John turned his amiable face on Kate. "How are you all at the home?"

"Very well."

"What's the news up your way?"

"Not a thing since the Fourth of July."

"That's a good while ago. Father pretty well?"

"Quite."

"When did you see him last?"

It was an odd question. "Last night—why?" asked Kate in turn.

"He didn't come in town with you today?" countered John.

"He rarely does," said Kate.

John nodded soothing assent to her explanation. "How's Van Horn?" he asked casually. "And Stone?" he added with undiminished interest. "All well," was his echo to her perfunctory answers. "Say, Belle, was Jim Laramie in town yesterday?"

Belle shook her head. "How about the day before?" he asked. Again she said

Fashions Beauty Contests

FOR ALL KINDS OF EVENINGS

By Corinne Lowe

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—The days are so full of evenings in the early spring and summer! Usually a number of people that you know are getting married or they are graduating or else it's just the normal course of dances and dinners that attend the post-Lenten season.

The new evening clothes are full of interest and—a little fuller of material. Whether or not you consent to the skirts of your daytime costume making any excursions beyond the ten inch line, you probably will make a compromise on the evening gown. For these, as interpreted by leading French houses, are undeniably longer than those of last season.

Again, the evening forces are divided between two factions. Whether your gown has the tight fitting basque and the bouffante skirt or whether it is the straight line effect with fullness at the sides is a matter to be determined only by one's figure and one's age. For both are launched by the leading dressmakers here and abroad.

In the straight line frocks it is notable that there are many and ingenious draped effects. Looking at the number of folds lying around loose in many of these new French evening gowns, one would think that the dressmaker of the Winged Victory had been brought back to life and activity.

Speaking of these draperies, let it be said right here that often the increased length of which we have spoken is confided entirely to them. Under clinging tunics and panels and drapes the stubborn little foundation skirt positively refuses to budge an inch. Like the famous Roderick Dhu, the rocks might move their firm base as soon as it.

This unconciliating spirit of the foundation skirt is brought out by a model from Rolande recently shown here. The skirt is short, and the sole responsibility for length is affixed to the tulle drapery hanging from the left shoulder. In many other cases the bureau of extra length is located in the sash trailing its length on one or both sides of the floor or in the back.

Speaking of the Rolande model, this made several other contributions to the leading thought on evening clothes. For example, it was of black and white, and that is perhaps the favored combination of Paris. Not only this, however, but the division of the tones was mapped out with the most extreme frankness, for the bodice, sleeveless and extending in a deep V filled in with self-material to meet a point of the skirt, was of white satin, while the skirt was of black satin. An arresting mode, this!

True, we are familiar enough with the bouffante evening frock which selects a bodice of contrasting color and fabric—what can be more charming, for example, than Lanvin's quaint black taffeta bodice pulled down in a point to meet the Empress Eugenie skirt of white net or organdy—but in the more formal models the combination is usually achieved more gradually.

There was still another point about this Rolande model. The white satin bodice was embroidered with pearls, while the black satin skirt was trimmed with silver spangles. I don't mention this to confirm your suspicion of the present independence of skirt and bodice, but to emphasize the place taken by beads and spangles and all sorts of glittering things in the new spring galaxy. Sequins, jet, jet fringe, opalescent beads, ropes and fringes of beads—all these dress us up nowadays like the proverbial Christmas tree. We are simply bowed down under ornaments.

To illustrate this, there is one of Doeuillet's recent creations which he calls "La Pecheresse." Why he called it this, the fisherwoman, instead of the fish itself, is not quite plain. For this is the plan of it: A bodice of copper cloth is crossed diagonally back and front with bands of jet sequins. Then the same jet sequins are used for many narrow panels on the skirt and for crowding medallions of the sparkling jet paillettes. Finn-ished—this would be our final comment upon it.

Satins, brocades, crêpes—these are the favored evening textures. One of the most stunning of Premet's creations is made of yellow and gold brocade, the skirt of which is hung from waistline to a little below the hem with ropes of flat gold beads. The same kind of ropes are attached to the shoulders, and a sash trailing its length far on the floor is the alibi of the train.

Next in popularity to glittering effects—indeed, sometimes combined with them—are the various kinds of laces. All are good, although the cire or waxed effects are the newest of all. Satins and taffetas—and the latter must not be forgotten—are perhaps at their best with lace. One of the most stunning of evening taffetas we have seen, for example, is in black, with skirt drapery and sleeves of black Medici lace.

We are showing at the left of the page a black satin model designed for the matron of from 50 to 70. This frock, combined as it is with steel cloth and trimmed with steel beads, forms a valuable suggestion to the mother or grandmother of the bride.

For the matron not quite so advanced in years is the model second from the left. This indicates, first of all, that it is quite proper this season to mix up satin and taffeta, for the foundation is black satin and the trimming of sapphire taffeta. As will be seen, this model shows flounces extending over the sides.

The next frock would be so charming for a wedding procession that one might be tempted to forget all about the bride and say, "Here comes the bridesmaid." It is made of rose color organdy over rose color satin, and the popular scallops of the hem are repeated above the sash of rose satin in a way to suggest the calyx of a flower. There is a design of appliqued work about the hem echoed in larger pattern on the underskirt. This is a little dress which would be suitable for the girl and younger woman at any summer dance.

We have almost forgotten nowadays that word of which Tennyson was so fond—stately. But the gown of old rose charmeuse which comes next rises to meet the adjective. This model is trimmed with steel, and the drapping is particularly attractive. The inverted V of the décolleté in the back is just a variant of the square necked backs which are found on so many late evening frocks.

Of course the V is still good, but the square back—or the one with corners just a little rounded, as Premet sometimes does it—is perhaps most significant of the new mode.

This is a year of appliqué. One of the smartest black satin coats which I have seen, for instance, had a design of gray duvetyn appliqued all about its border.

It follows, therefore, that the fashionable epidemic has attacked evening frocks, and of this fact the fourth model furnishes us an excellent example. The foundation is jade green chiffon, and on this is appliqued in a way to give stunning variety to the skirt big diamonds of black velvet outlined with silver beads. There is a kind of girdle-drapery-sash of black velvet, and the beads are distributed over the corsage.

We are so habituated to the idea of black lace that we are apt to forget the more blooming effects. Yet such effects are sprinkled all through the French collections. Witness a frock from Drecoll which drapes rust and gold lace over a draped gown of rust satin, and witness this last semi-formal toilette with its flounced skirt of rose tinted Chantilly combined with jaquette of gray blue taffeta.

FAT accumulates on the muscles that are least disturbed by muscular action. That is why hips and waistline are the first to advertise any flirtation that has been going on with ice creams and chocolates and other forbidden foods. The more violent the flirtation the more the scandal is going to advertise itself.

You've heard tell of the "middle aged" spread? Probably seen many instances of it. Invariably it is due to lack of muscular action. It does not always wait for middle age, either. The young who have been lax in regard to exercising will find themselves having to let out an inch or two in last season's dance frock. These exercises are recommended for daily practice to both remedy and prevent the waist and hips from losing their symmetry.

One girl I know reduced her waist two inches and her hips three and one-half in two months, doing the exercises illustrated here. She did them daily—morning and night. Never missed once. She started them five times each and increased the number until now she does each exercise fifty times morning and night, and is in excellent general health.

Do them in loose clothing, as she did, and in a room that is well ventilated, if not before an open window. The latter is better, of course.

Whats your beauty ail? Too fat? Too thin? Sky on hair? Oily hair, oily skin, freckles, pimples, or blackheads? Flat chested or flat footed? Write to me. I have a tonic, a diet, or a set of exercises for what ails you and you're welcome to them and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply send a stamped, addressed envelope. HEAVY: TOO MUCH SLEEP will make you as dull as too little. From fourteen to fifteen hours is too much time out of the allotted twenty-four at your age. From eight to nine hours is the required amount for the average individual. There is something wrong when you require more than that.

ELSIE: I DON'T BELIEVE THE moderate use of cosmetic powders is harmful to the skin. In fact, they furnish an appreciable protection to the skin against the ravages of wind and sun. A good powder will not clog the pores, and certainly an unpowdered, shiny face is not a pretty thing to behold. If the face is washed thoroughly at night, blackheads will not form.

B. T.: I JUST CANNOT DEFINE it. It is a subtle thing that defies words to explain it. You may be beautiful and be quite without personality. You may be extremely homely and be so possessed of it that you win every time. Anyway, personality is a grand thing to have.

It Was a Good One.

It was our custom in English class at school to choose a certain person to read his theme aloud before the class. On this particular day the girl who sat across the table from me had let me see her paper before class started. It was a good one, so when the teacher asked whose theme we would like to hear, I promptly suggested that the girl across from me read hers. She arose, but instead of reading the one I had seen, she took another one from her book. It was a wonderful ode to the president of the senior class, praising him to the skies and throwing oratorical bouquets at him. I was the president.

A Patient Patient.

I am a nurse, and one day, wanting a certain article in a hurry for a dressing while in the hospital, I rushed into a patient's room where I thought it had been left. I was sure the room was empty, as I had seen the patient out in the corridor in a wheel chair a few minutes previously.

I looked through the dresser drawers quickly and among the various toilet articles without success. I turned to go and discovered the patient sitting in the opposite corner, curiously watching my movements. I stammered an apology and hurried out. F. F.

Given a Lecture.

I was principal of the district school, and, by virtue of that position, was elected president of the newly formed Community club. About the third meeting we had three speakers from the county headquarters. One of my assistants, a winsome looking young woman, was seated beside me as secretary, and I was more engrossed with her than interested in the proceedings of the meeting.

The second speaker was a short, middle aged, business-like woman who had just returned from a state convention and was anxious to unburden herself of some of the new ideas she had acquired. She was just getting well under way when, all unconsciously, I picked up a pencil and began to tap lightly on the table before me. She looked around suddenly and, thinking it was the signal for her to stop, sat down.

I was entirely ignorant at the time of what I had done, but when the meeting was over she came right up to me and, before every one, gave me a lecture I haven't yet forgotten. J. R.

Upstairs and Downstairs.

A short time ago I invited a number of friends in to play bridge. When they were leaving one of them said to me: "I found this white linen bow in the crown of my hat. It's the one your maid wears in her hair." Evidently, while we were playing cards downstairs, my maid was upstairs trying on the guests' hats, and, unfortunately, left a clew. It was truly most embarrassing. L. W.

Accommodating.

Some years ago, before prohibition was in force, I was traveling, making a great many small towns. As a rule there was only one hotel in a town, and invariably a saloon in the same building. I disliked this exceedingly, and determined to avoid stopping at such a place where possible. One evening, alighting from a train in a small town, I was accosted by two local hotel hack drivers.

"Hotel, lady!"

I thought to myself, surely both of these hotels do not run saloons.

So I said to the nearest driver, "Does your hotel have a saloon in connection with it?"

He replied, "No, lady, but we will send out and get anything you want."

Just Getting Warm.

Our train left Colorado Springs at 10 o'clock in the evening. An hour later we came to a stop because of a freight just ahead. It was quite cool and I rang for the porter, as I wanted another blanket, but got no answer. A party of men went through the car. Putting my head out of the curtains, I asked one of them if he had seen the porter. He hadn't, but gallantly volunteered to locate him, when I explained my need of an extra blanket.

He was gone so long I decided to forage for myself from some unoccupied berth. I saw an uper vacant, so I helped myself to the blanket it contained and hurried back to mine. I had just snuggled down cozily when the man returned. He apologized for the time he'd been and said he was sorry he hadn't been successful in finding the porter. I thanked him and he went on.

I was roused next by the exclamation, "By George! Somebody has swiped my blanket!" I recognized the voice of my porter hunting friend.

I hadn't the courage to face him, so I waved my hand through the curtains as I poked the blanket out, and meekly called, "I guess I have it."

"Is this your idea of reward for my efforts?" he asked, loudly. There was an uproar of laughter which drowned my apologies. M. L.

Baby Carriages and Furniture

A Pretty Carriage for a Pretty Baby—Naturally!

The dearest, sweetest, finest, brightest baby in all the world, isn't he? How proudly Sister takes him out for all the world to see!

You're proud of his smart little Stroller, too, if it's a Lloyd—the wicker weaving as smooth and even and perfect as a fine fabric; the finish as careful as every little garment made for his layette.

Although they're so much better, Lloyd Carriages and Wicker Furniture are not the most expensive, because Marshall B. Lloyd invented a method and loom which produce Baby Carriages and Wicker Furniture thirty times faster and finer than the old hand woven products. These inventions cut labor costs, enabling Mr. Lloyd to weave the finest wickers, use the best materials, employ the most skilled workmen, add the latest refinements and still sell his wicker products at remarkable prices. That's the power of invention.

WHAT DO YOU THINK?

Too short hours and too high wages make high prices.
High prices make less buying.
Too short hours and too high wages make less buying.
Less buying makes less production.
Too short hours and too high wages make less production.
Less production makes less employment.
Too short hours and too high wages make less employment.
Less employment makes hard times.
Too short hours and too high wages make hard times.

There is a glorious mean somewhere; there is a reasonable day's work; there is a fair day's wage. They must be found. All must work, all must live. Work, capital, land, homes, all necessities must be available at reasonable prices.

What do you think? Doesn't this follow:

Abundant production means lower prices and higher real wages. This means better net results, as well as greater profit and comfort to all.

PATTERNS by CLOTILDE

9977.—Woman's waist. Sizes 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 1¾ yards of 36 inch material and 2 yards of binding.

9974.—Woman's one-piece apron. Sizes 36, 40 and 44 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3¼ yards of 36 inch material with ½ yard of 36 inch contrasting.

9955.—Girl's long waisted dress. Sizes 6 to 14 years. Size 8 requires 2 yards of 36 inch material.

How to Use the Patterns

An apron which many will use as a morning dress is shown in No. 9974. It is cut in one piece, sleeves and all, and is intended to be slipped on over the head. Shrink your material, and then carefully measure your lengths from neck to hem, and then allow enough for a hem about four inches deep.

Plain or figured gingham or percale will be pretty; if plain, the trimming bands can be of a plaid or stripe, or they can be plain bands, gaily embroidered. If the apron material is figured, use plain material of some contrasting color for the bands at the top of the pockets, sleeve and neck edges, and for the belt, and on these embroider gay flowers or fruits, with maybe some lattice work thrown in.

Mark the places where the buttons are to be sewed on the front, and on the under side of the apron stitch a narrow band, cut on the straight of the cloth, first turning in all edges neatly. This will make a stronger place for the buttons to be sewed to, and, in measuring for the belt length, be sure it is plenty long. If at all too short, it will pull the apron out of place and spoils the looks of it.

Don't forget the curve under each arm. The seams there must be reinforced to keep from tearing.

Baste the band around the neck through the middle. Before basting it in position, turn in the lower edge evenly, and then, before turning in the neck of the apron and upper edge of the band, clip through both edges at rather short intervals, clipping just a little less deep than the turning-in will be. This will keep the edge from puckering. Be sure that the edges have no points where the turning-in comes. It is not especially easy to turn in so curved a surface, and uneven places look bad.

No. 9955 will make up prettily in cotton voile, a heavy cotton crêpe, or small checked silk. The lining to the waist is put together separately, and after the outside is seamed it is slipped in place over the lining—the lower edges basted together, first gathering the outside between the notches. This makes the long-waisted blouse effect which will be becoming to any little girl.

The skirt is a one piece, gathered one, and is marked for a plait at each side of both the front and back. Of course, the skirt can be gathered all around if preferred, but the plaits look well.

Ribbon will be suitable for the sash, and the only other trimming the dress will need will be the binding that should finish the neck and sleeves. When the skirt and waist are stitched together there should be a straight strip of the lining, about one and one-half inches wide, basted and stitched on in a seam at the same time. Then this strip is basted down over the seam, and the upper edge turned in and hemmed down to the lining, being careful not to let any of the stitches come through to the right side.

No. 9977 is an up to date model, and one can hardly own too many blouses. They can be made a decidedly expensive item, or if one can make them at home and not choose the most expensive materials, a real saving can be effected.

A small check in black and white in a voile could be made most attractive from this pattern, by having a little embroidery on the front of the blouse in green, coral, and black, for instance; nothing large of conspicuous, but perhaps a few tiny roses with leaf and stem scattered over the front. The sleeve edges also the collar could be bound with black silk or satin.

Crêpe de chine or pongee also would make up attractively, or batiste or sheer lawn—these last two making a pretty blouse to wear with some odd skirt at home on a warm day.

The blouse is stitched to the top of the sash across the front, while the blouse in the back is cut quite long, finished across the bottom and up the sides, and the sash carried over it and tied in a bow at the back.

The fullness on the shoulders will be becoming, and there is fullness also in the middle of the back. If you think this would not be becoming, measure the width of some waist that fits well, measuring across the back in its broadest part—from armhole to armhole, about one inch below the shoulder seam at the armhole end. Then lay the material folded down the middle, and put the pattern on it, folding the extra width underneath. One has to be careful not to make mistakes in measurements, and look carefully before cutting to be certain everything is as it should be.

THE SMALL APARTMENT.

ISN'T it just old human nature to think that nothing is "awful" if a high enough price is paid for it!

We sympathize with the crowded tenements, and talk commiseratingly about hundreds of families being "herded" together, but we will go into any of the new apartment hotels and boast that we pay $60 a week for the privilege of such herding. The $250 a month for two rooms is the golden dividing line between the rich man's kitchenette apartment and the poor man's light housekeeping quarters.

Without a doubt there are many things that we can learn from those who, either from choice or necessity, lead the simple life. One of them is the condensing of personal belongings and eliminating of superfluities. The first step towards simplifying, in moving from a large into a small apartment, is to steel oneself against sentimentality.

Make a selection of the things that are necessary, despite of their association. Discard the ugly pieces with the same fine disregard. Bid a fond and final farewell to ponderous pieces—wardrobes, big dining room sets, large bookcases, and great library tables. Determine to furnish your living room with all the informality of a studio, allowing it to serve for various combination purposes.

In a new, expensive two room apartment hotel building that I have lately seen, the living room is spacious, a quality that is always pleasing. I should rather live in two rooms, granting that one of them had a sense of space than in four or even six rooms all of which were cramped in point of size.

In one side wall a pair of folding doors inclose a folding bed. It is a simple improvement on the sham mantel.

"Is it sanitary," I ask, "to have the bed closed into the wall that way?"

And the agent in answer shows a little ventilator inside. For my part I am not convinced. Day beds seem to me preferable. Many, many disguised living room beds are on the market. Day beds appeal to me most. They may be dressed after being made up and covered with good looking boxed covers of upholstery fabric, so that they look decorative. Then they may have especially made pillows to add to their charm.

Any article of furniture that can be made to serve two or more purposes seems to be desirable for the kitchenette. Console tables answer many purposes. A pair of these with squared drop leaves is precious.

One may be used with a mirror above as a console or as a dressing table. Place on it a decorative box about as large as a Bible box to hold toilet things. The pair of tables joined will accommodate eight guests, which is about "as many as the law allows" in small quarters.

An attractive three fold screen is a pleasant perquisite. In a kitchenette which I have recently furnished we placed a built-in dresser and work table like the one illustrated here, but substituted a narrow three burner gas stove for the little chest of drawers beside the sink. As the kitchen and dining room were combined, we placed a rod with a chintz curtain on it to draw across the whole group, adding doors below the sink. A piece of zinc lined with asbestos prevents the heat from penetrating at the sides, back, and base of the stove. We painted the woodwork light lemon color with tracings of mauve, and the insides of the cupboards turquoise blue. The linoleum is blue and taupe, and the kitchen utensils blue enamel.

In the living room of another kitchenette apartment we used a folding day bed of excellent quality in place of a davenport. This bed is equipped with box-springs. One-half of the springs roll in under the other half by day.

I must tell you that the nucleus of the living room furniture was made up of a rather inexpensive breakfast room set. This was composed of a pair of pretty tables with drop ends, one of which with a desk set upon it was placed against the wall between the windows as a writing table, with a banjo clock ticking merrily above it. And the other with a lamp on it near the upholstered arm chair took on a living-room air.

In the corner a cupboard filled with pleasant china gayified the place. At the longest wall was a sideboard, with one good long drawer in it that is used for a skirt drawer. The walls are painted jade green; the woodwork oyster green. The carpet is a greenish olive. The furniture is coffee and cream with jade trimming, and the short chintz curtains combine in their coloring all of the other tints in the room. A long narrow mirror hangs horizontally above the sideboard and on the walls are several excellent paintings, that give to the little unpretentious place an air of charm and distinction.

Sconces and lamps are decoratively attractive but must be used with discrimination. Sofa pillows add in general to comfort and beauty, but should be chosen with a sense of balance where a day bed is placed sideways against a wall. For example, a square pillow boxed and stood upright against the wall at either end of the day bed, with a cylindrical pillow between them, is much more interesting than a lot of pillows thrown pellmell on the bed.

A bed with a day cover of black and gold brocade has such pillows covered in this way. The two square pillows are of black satin front and back with a puff of cloth of gold around them. The cylinder pillow is of cloth of gold, encircled with black satin puffs toward each end. The square pillows are trimmed at the corners with satin loops and long black silk tassels, and the cylinder is trimmed with a little bunch of French hand made flowers in black and gold.

On the wall space above this arrangement is a painting of flowers with an Italian wall bracket on either side holding small gray bowls filled with ivy.

A stunning color combination in a room where the walls are the palest tint of heliotrope is a floor painted blue and partially covered with a midnight blue rug. The furniture, deep old ivory, is trimmed with lines of coral color. The rush seats of the chairs are painted blue grass green. The white bedspread is trimmed with red cross stitching, and the curtains are of red and yellow calico trimmed with narrow red worsted fringe.

O. D.: With the style of furniture that you have I believe that wall paper would be better than paneling in your bedroom. Why not paint the bed and dresser and the rest of the furniture a light French gray? Get a neutral two toned paper for the side walls. Have a day bed cover and valence around your dressing table of coffee the cream with a flowered chintz trimming and flowered chintz cover on your dressing table. The color of the room as it is at present is intolerable. A fifty inch repp makes a good material for bed covers.

Not Only Your Poor Feet

The insidious evil of high heels and narrow pinched toes is greater than most women believe. Ill-balanced shoes do more than discomfort the feet; they cause fallen arches, back aches, nervous strain, displacement of the internal organs, weariness, depression, ill health.

Without sacrifice of good looks, the Cantilever Shoe gives perfect comfort and perfect carriage. The last conforms to the mold of the foot, with room for the toes, and with trim fit and support about the instep and heel. The outline of the sole and the set of the heel are designed to preserve the balance and the beauty of a NATURAL walk.

The flexible shank yields with every movement of the muscles. Instead of being bound to a rigid sole which retards the circulation and makes the foot weak, in Cantilevers the foot has liberty to exercise and bend freely and gracefully. This freedom of movement strengthens the muscles and prevents and corrects flat foot. Your health will improve in Cantilever Shoes. Widths from AAAAA to EE. Write for booklet.

THEIR LAST DAYS HAPPY.

THE lobby of the hotel in a mid-west county seat town was crowded with men who stood talking in groups. It was the day of the letting of contracts for the construction of a big stretch of paved rural road, and contracting companies from far and near had sent representatives. It was an atmosphere of hard headed business, yet it takes but one touch of cupid to make the whole world akin.

The door of the hotel opened admitting a white haired, stooped old man with the slight little body of an aged woman clinging to his arm. They seemed nervous and embarrassed as they made their way to the desk.

"Where can we get a marriage license?" the man asked the clerk.

In a moment business had been forgotten. Everybody stopped talking and watched the couple as, following the directions of the clerk, they set out from the hotel for the courthouse.

Then one of the men spoke up. "Say, boys, it's a couple of hours before our meeting. What do you say to giving the old couple a sendoff?"

The idea took, and twenty minutes afterward a crowd was in front of the courthouse with the band and an old buggy.

When the newlyweds came out, the band struck up a wedding march, and while the rest cheered and waved hats, one of the crowd stepped up, gallantly offered the bride his arm, and invited the couple to enter in the buggy.

The two were plainly frightened, but seeing only good nature in the faces of the crowd they did as they were bid. All hands took hold of the buggy, and with the band leading the procession set out for the depot. The train wasn't due for a few minutes, and the groom was called upon for a speech.

Timidly he looked at the woman at his side, and slowly got to his feet. In a voice which tried hard not to tremble he said:

"I guess maybe it seems a joke to you fellows—old people like us getting married—but it ain't no joke to Lizzie and me. It's plain happiness.

"Forty-five years ago we was married. We didn't get along as well as we ought; quarreled over foolish things; finally separated, and Lizzie got a divorce. She went out to a western state and I lost complete track of her. I never married again. She was the only woman for me.

"Last week I got a notion all of a sudden to go back to the town where we was brought up and married, and where I had a brother living. I didn't know that notion was a little message over the wires from out west, but I guess it was. When I got to my brother's, the first thing he said to me was, 'Say, who do you s'pose came two days ago to visit Mandy Schall. It's Lizzie.'

"Right then I knew fate had brought us together again so we could make up for all our old foolishness. Sure enough, I found she had been wanting me so bad that she had come back to the old town just to see where we used to be together.

"That's all there is to tell. It didn't take us long to decide to come here and get married. Now we are going to be happy together for our last days.

"Thank you for giving us this little celebration. We don't mind, for we guess you mean well."

They did mean well, and, forgetting the fun and touched with the story, they gathered around to give congratulations. F. L. C.

Varied Activities of Women

Mrs. Lucy Baily, aged 75 years, of Virginia, has been in the government service for the last forty-eight years. She was recently retired on a pension.

The "farmer" government of Bulgaria is about to enact legislation making work compulsory, even for the women, no matter what their social standing may be.

Mrs. Anna H. Collins of Aurora, Ill., has begun to build a home after her own ideas and, despite her 60 years of age, plans to finish the work without the aid of any man.

The women of Java are being taught Occidental theories of equality with men. The progress of the suffrage movement is necessarily slow, but many believe in its ultimate success.

The women of Constantinople have been emancipated, but in the streets they wear what appears almost like a uniform. The cut of all street costumes is almost the same, the only difference being in the color.

Every Japanese woman who sails from Kobe as an emigrant must first present to the authorities evidence of spending at least three hours at the Kobe Y. W. C. A. in learning foreign customs.

Dr. Grace M. Norris of Utica, N. Y., the first woman coroner in the United States, now aspires to be the first woman mayor in the east and has announced her intention of running for that office at the next election.

The women of western Australia are now eligible for the assembly and legislative council.

HOW TO COOK OLD POTATOES.

OLD potatoes are inexpensive. We can save some money by using them generously. We can, perhaps, send some of the money saved to help feed the starving 15,000,000 in China. Five dollars, it is said, will keep a native of that country nourished for five months.

It is a sin to let the old potatoes, which we always seem to have in such abundance in the early spring, go to waste. We should make every effort to save them today when millions of lives not only in China but in the near east are being agonizingly blotted out by starvation, and while what were once really noble and prosperous cities, like Vienna and St. Petersburg (Petrograd), are becoming like charnel houses filled with every sort of decay and desolation because of lack of food.

A perusal of the literature of three years ago on the subject of "potato patriots" would be worth while for all of us today, but we need to use some broader and perhaps even more human word than even that of patriot.

Three years ago, in writing on this subject, I said: "The earliest great use of the potato in Europe proved its service in the famines produced by wars." And after expatiating at length on mashed potato I gave the following recipe, which at the time seemed to me one of my most successful adaptations, though since neglected.

Potato Muffins with Cheese Sauce.

Fold into two cups of rather wet but well fluffed (beat hard with wire beater) mashed potatoes, two egg whites beaten to a stiff froth. Drop half of this mixture into well buttered muffin molds and bake for half an hour, or until well set and somewhat brown. Beat the yolks of the two eggs and add to the remainder of the mixture and bake in the same way.

Arrange the muffins on a platter, pour a cheese sauce over and around them, garnish each muffin with a bit of chopped canned pimento and the whole dish with parsley. Bits of the yellow and white muffins showing enhance the interest or, we might even say, its mystery.

Cheese Sauce.

Make a white sauce by blending with one tablespoon of just melted butter one tablespoon of flour, then adding one cup of milk and a half teaspoon of salt, and stir over the fire until thick. Add to this one scant cup of grated cheese, preferably the soft yellow sort, and cook until it melts.

Other Potato Muffins.

A good fluffy mashed potato may be put into buttered muffin pans, brushed over with butter, and baked. These, or those with eggs, are sometimes called potato timbales, and are used for garnishing meats or are served with a plain white sauce. An onion sauce served with them makes a desirable luncheon dish. To give plain potato muffins without egg as high or higher food value than those with egg—also added flavor—put a tablespoon of grated cheese in the muffin mold before adding the potato. Add a little butter to these, and eat as you would a potato cake. The muffins with white of egg are not unlike angel cake, when perfect, and are excellent with a white sauce. Those with the yokes are more like an unsweetened custard, and are excellent with a beef gravy, or they might be eaten with sugar.

Mashed Potato.

Old potatoes, because of their extra sweetness, make excellent mashed potatoes, and if well scrubbed they will make the best mashed potatoes if cooked in their skins—boiled or steamed. Since at this time of year they are quite likely to have external defects, it is best to take off a thin ring of skin, which may be a rather broad one if such is needed to take off both the rose and the other end, where imperfection center, and any other defective parts. When cooked, mash potato over heat, with a wire masher, add a piece of butter to taste, salt, and cream, preferably hot; then whisk or beat until light and of freshly worked butter consistency.

A wire potato masher, which will both break down and build up again, since it may serve as a whisk as well as a masher, is the best utensil to use. When mashed potato is to be mixed with some other ingredient, or used for a bread, it is almost necessary to put it through a ricer or sieve. But a dry potato riced and not creamed and fluffed may be one of the most choky of foods. Mashed potato needs to be fluffed to smoothness and lightness so as to be like velvet on the tongue. A good whisking or beating changes its character as much as beating changes the character of a white of egg.

Mashed potato to be used in a pastry bag may be compared with whipped cream. You cannot work with either of these in a pastry bag if they are too wet or too dry. If too wet, they will not hold the form given, and if too dry they break.

Cook Potatoes Slowly.

Potatoes cannot be cooked rapidly; that is, with a lot of fire, and retain flavor and other desirable qualities. If they are cooked in rapidly boiling water they are likely to go to pieces on the outside, while they have a "bone" in the middle. If baked with too hot an oven they burn on the outside and are hard at the center. In either case the outside gets cooked in part before the inside gets heated through. If the outside has a dried up blackened skin, the heat is shut out from the center.

Escalloped potatoes must be cooked slowly or they are poor. Potatoes au gratin must be cooked slowly for several reasons.

Rapid evaporation of the water in a potato or in the water or a sauce around it hardens a potato. Hold the steam around them and they cook more rapidly and thoroughly and with but little fire.

Easiest Way of Cooking Potatoes.

Use a flat bottomed shallow kettle, preferably of aluminum and certainly with a close cover. For boiling unpeeled potatoes never use aluminum. Peel the potatoes as economically as possible. If there is time, they may be scrubbed, defects cut out, then dropped into boiling water for ten minutes. The skins will then slip off, usually.

Slice the potatoes into the kettle, a little thicker than a silver dollar, add a little cold water, put over fire, bring to boil, and after a few minutes turn fire to lowest point. The potatoes will be cooked in from fifteen to twenty minutes, mainly by the hot steam in the kettle.

One-half cup of water will do for two or many more potatoes, if a careful cook is doing the work. This gives the potato starch grain a chance to swell. With a quantity of water they are drowned. The water will be taken up, or if any remains it will be like a jelly or like cooked starch if the work has been done to perfection. Potatoes cooked in this fashion may be mashed, used for a soup or a salad, and after being mashed there are endless uses for them.

Potato Salad.

Potatoes cooked in the easiest way are particularly good for a salad, for though they may be mashed and dried over a high flame for a minute or two, when just done they are somewhat salvey, as are the potatoes which are most favored for potato salads, even when boiled and sliced. Salads are considered finest if seasoned while the potato is warm, then set aside and finally cooled to the point of chilling.

One of the many ways of dressing the salad which usually turns out well is to slice some onion fine, mix it with hot sliced potato, which by this advice is sliced while raw and then cooked. For six potatoes use a teaspoon of salt and half a teaspoon of pepper.

Then mix one egg yolk thoroughly with a tablespoon and a half of olive oil and two tablespoons of vinegar. It is best to mix the salt and pepper with this. Mix the whole well and pour over potato, then pour a fourth of a cup of hot meat stock over this amount of potato, lift and mix well. Boiling water can be used instead of the broth. Let stand a few hours before using. The hot broth or water is needed to disseminate the onion flavor.

If the raw onion is not pleasantly blended in a potato salad, the results are unpleasant. If not sucessful with raw onion, the onion juice only, and not too much of that, should be used. A plain French dressing may be poured over potatoes, which may be then chilled. Cooked dressings and mayonnaise may be used in addition, or either of these alone.

Potato Gnocchi [Italian.]

Scrub, boil, peel, and put two pounds of potato through a ricer. Measure potato and take half as much flour as you have potato. Sift the flour on a breadboard, add the potato and salt to taste, then mix the two, and knead them lightly.

When thoroughly and smoothly blended, make little rolls the shape of a piece of pulled candy ready to be cut up. Cut these rolls into one inch lengths, or they may be a little longer. Have ready some lightly salted boiling water, drop the gnocchi into it, and cook for ten minutes. They will rise to the top of the water in a minute or so. Drain, butter, sprinkle with grated cheese, and serve hot.

The Italians mold these bits of potato dough in various ways. Sometimes they press each piece gently with the finger or the handle of a knife. If they are pressed against the inside of a coarse grater they will curl around the finger and will be ornamented in a pretty way on the other side. This is the way I have seen them made, and eaten them there, too, in Turin, Italy.

Wisconsin Potato Bread.

The following recipe for a one pound loaf of bread was a part of a good deal of good work on the potato done by the home economics people at the University of Wisconsin three years ago: "Two cups of boiled and riced potato (packed solidly), approximately two cups of sifted flour, one and a half teaspoons of salt, one tablespoon of shortening, two teaspoons of sugar, one-fourth compressed yeast cake or one-fourth cake of dry yeast, one tablespoon of warm water.

"Boil and drain the potatoes. Put them through a vegetable ricer or sieve. Soak or soften the yeast in the water. Mix the yeast with the potato, the salt, the shortening, and the sugar. Add one-half cup of flour; allow the sponge to rise—when dry yeast is used the sponge must rise over night.

"Work flour into the light sponge until a stiff dough is formed. It may take a little more or a little less than two cups. Let the dough rise until it doubles its bulk; knead the second time, form into a loaf, and let it rise. When light, bake in a moderate oven three-fourths of an hour."

Complete Utilization of Potatoes.

Our grandmothers made their starches from potato, and the little girls in the elementary schools, in their first food lessons, often are taught how to make this starch, which may be used in cooking as well as in the laundry. They wash, peel, grate, and then pour cold water on the potato. Then they drain and squeeze all the wetness into a tumbler. They get a milky liquid, and after this stands a white sediment forms in the bottom of the glass, with a clear liquid above.

It is the easiest kind of work to put a potato through the food chopper, using the nut butter disc; to pour water over it, and then drain and squeeze it all through a cloth. The white sediment begins to settle almost at once.

Good gardeners wet up all potato parings, bury them in the ground, and get the same enrichment for their vegetables that leaf mold gives. And, by the way, the children are not through when they have procured the white sediment. They take the liquid from which it has been precipitated and learn things about that.

There is a great deal to learn about the potato and its innumerable uses. The kitchen adventurer may find a different thing to do with potatoes each of the 365 days of the year.

The Magnetism of Complexion

Why the Use of Stuart's Calcium Wafers Has Such an Influence That It Clears Skin of Pimples.

It is generally admitted that the laxative action of calcium sulphide is one of the best influences to clear the skin. But not until Stuart's Calcium Wafers were introduced was this fact so generally manifest.

Their action in the bowels and liver is so prompt that the blood is cleansed of those impurities that show in the skin in the form of pimples.

The skin thus influenced by these wonderful Stuart's Calcium Wafers clears of those little eruptions, and firm skin glows with the health that protects from wind and weather.

These wafers contain no poisonous drug of any kind and soon overcome bad breath and the dull, stupid feeling that results from constipation. Mild in action.

No matter how hard you have tried to make your skin beautiful, Stuart's Calcium Wafers should work wonders with it. Rash and a muddy "filled-up" skin texture all give way to a more lovely complexion.

You can get Stuart's Calcium Wafers at any drug store at 60 cents a box, and you will be positively delighted with their wonderful laxative and beautifying influence.

It Required SPEED To Build This House In One Day

—the GENERAL Furnished It!

Masters of grammar will say that the above heading is bad English and all wrong. The GENERAL furnished the home—the Lumbermen's Ass'n of Chicago furnished the speed and the lumber that built the house, but the GENERAL furnished their share of the speed, too. They delivered and set in order every piece of furniture in the home in one hour, including the laying of the rugs and the hanging of the draperies. The building of this house in a single working day of eight hours and the furnishing of the same in one hour is a world's record, and it required the team work of two of America's greatest organizations to do it, the GENERAL FURNITURE CO. and the LUMBERMEN ASS'N of Chicago. This acomplishment is the hardest blow the rent hogs have ever received. Every customer of the GENERAL is given a free savings bank account, and these savings can be turned in on the purchase of one of these cozy five-room homes. Particulars at all stores.

SLIP COVERS MADE TO ORDER — DOLL HOSPITAL—ALWAYS WORKING PLANTING LORE

by DORIS BLAKE

IF slips are cut from plants with shears, they will not live. They must be broken off to do well.

When drops of water hang on the leaves of plants, they will soon bloom.

If plants received as gifts grow and flourish, it is a sign that the giver is a true and faithful friend, but if they wither and refuse to grow, the giver is false and an enemy.

Count the blossoms on your favorite plant; if they are odd, you will have no enemies, but if even you have at least one.

When you free your plants or shrubs of broken twigs and dead leaves, never burn them, as it will make the plants sick and probably cause them to wither away.

If a house plant suddenly withers, it is a sign that some one will soon die in the room.

If a person purchase a plant that another person intended to buy, it will wither and die.

Old wives, when gathering herbs for their salves and simples, were wont to judge of their luck during the year by the facility with which they found the desired plants.

If you pick up a shrub or plant of any kind aftr it has been discarded by some one else and the plant grows, it is said to mean certain old age to you.

A cutting of a stolen plant will surely grow.

It is believed in Cornwall, England, that household plants will wither and die soon after there has been a death in the house, unless a piece of black cloth is tied to them.

Greeks believe that some plants have immortal souls.

If the dirt from your plants falls to the floor, you will soon see a newly made grave.

A childless woman is believed by the Irish to have the strongest power over herbs, especially those used for malades of children.

If a little fresh dirt taken from the grave of a child which has been baptized within a twelve month, is sprinkled on potted plants, it will make them flourish and have large, handsome flowers.

In Mexico, there is a herb that is popularly called the "rattleweed"; if horses eat of it, it is believed that they will go mad.

Plants having "lady" attached to their names, were formerly dedicated to the ancient, goddesses; but Christianity claimed these flowers for the Virgin Mary. They are of good medicinal virtues.

In Tuscany, there is a little plant which grows on the walls, whose tiny flowers are of whitish rose color. It is gathered on Assention day and hung up until the eighth of September; and for those who do this, the virgin has great favor and will protect them from all evil. If this plant will not blossom while hanging, it is a bad omen.

LOVE LETTERS

The Tribune will pay $5 for every love letter published. So, if you can write a good one, or if you have one in your private or family possessions you would like to enter in the contest, send it to Doris Blake, The Tribune, Chicago. As no letters will be returned, send copies of the ones you wish to retain possession of.

AT THE SUNSET GATES.

DEAR: Night has come early, as it does in Italy, night with its softness and shadows, and night with its tantalizing, never endng memories of you! All about me now the quaint old city of Rome sleeps—Rome, in the land of eternal things; yet, in my heart the song of you never sleeps—the dream goes always on. Jean, how I have loved you, and yet that night so long ago, in the yesteryears, you sent me away. Between us now are only the years—only the broken bits of what was once a radiant white flame, all the worthwhileness of Life!

Did you know that your sweet little smile and your eyes that once said "I love you" have never gone away from me? I have but to wish, Jeanie dear, and I see you standing before me—your hair shimmering with the sunshine, your hands outstretched to me; but you do not call to me as once you did. And, oh, though I have stood in the wide, wide open spaces, head bowed in prayer, with your little hands seemingly held in mine—though I have watched the sunrises from the mountain tops and have seen you smile at me through their loveliness, I have called, and you heard me not.

And now, dear, they tell me that the days are almost gone, and my life's journey nears the sunset gates. Sometimes they seem to open for me, but they are as gently closed, and I cannot go in.

I need you, Jean. Will you come to me now? That I may rest my hands in yours, and see you smile; to dream again of that day when, though your lips denied, your eyes told me of the love that was mine. We have forgiven, you once wrote me—and will you come now? For the sake of the love that was life itself, you will come soon.

And always, sweetheart, though I pass through the sunset gates and they have closed, in that last, still harbor of peace, I shall know you are with me; and night may come again, with its starshine and the blessedness of its soothing darkness, and I shall not be afraid.

Yours, till the last breath in life,
ROGER.

"TIZ" FOR SORE, TIRED FEET--AH!

"Tiz" is grand for aching, swollen, tender, calloused feet or corns.

Ah! what relief. No more tired feet; no more burning feet; no more swollen, aching, tender, sweaty feet. No more soreness in corns, callouses, bunions.

No matter what ails your feet or what under the sun you've tried without getting relief, just use "Tiz." "Tiz" is the only remedy that draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet. "Tiz" cures your foot trouble so you'll never limp or draw up your face in pain. Your shoes won't seem tight and your feet will never, never hurt or get sore and swollen. Think of it, no more foot misery, no more agony from corns, callouses or bunions.

Get a box at any drug store or department store and get instant relief. Wear smaller shoes. Just once try "Tiz." Get a whole year's foot comfort for a few cents. Think of it.

The third figure in the illustration is necessary in order to show the great usefulness of the Cooker. The sauce-pan has polished rubberoid handle. Above these three views is shown the 5½-quart tea-kettle, made of extra heavy metal, with rubberoid handle; the 6-quart preserving kettle, with rubberoid handle; the 2-quart lipped sauce-pan; the 2-quart pudding-pan; and the 8-inch frying-pan. ROME DeLuxe QUALITY

Every genuine De Luxe Bedspring bears the trade-mark on the side rail of the spring. Look for it—it is your guarantee

"DeLuxe" The Bedspring LUXURIOUS

Better Days Come From Better Nights

To wake up fresh as a daisy makes the whole day worth while. Everyone knows this, and everyone wants that fine "good morning" feeling. Yet few know how to get it scientifically, not realizing that the spring is the foundation of restful sleep.

You cannot rest in full comfort on the ordinary coil, woven wire or national spring. It's impossible to do so, because these springs hold the body in a strained, unnatural, distorted position, causing tension on the joints and muscles, and pressure on prominent parts of the anatomy.

You cannot lie in an uncomfortable position on a De Luxe because it is scientifically constructed to mold itself to the body curves, supporting each and every part equally. This means perfect muscular relaxation.

Examine the De Luxe at your dealer's. The more carefully you compare the De Luxe with any spring at any price, the more certainly you will recognize its superior, luxurious comfort. It is always finished in Rome Gray enamel, and on the side rail appears the Rome Quality Trade-Mark, which identifies all Rome products. For wood or metal beds.

KINNEY-ROME COMPANY - Chicago, Illinois

Sleep on a De Luxe Bedspring

It's the BEDSPRING, not the bed or mattress, that makes all the difference

The Last Word in Paris Fashions

GON. IS BREADTH.

By Mary Brush Williams.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS.—[Special Correspondence.]—It used to be that the silhouette had two dimensions, but now there is only one visible, and that is length. Thickness passed along with the middle ages—or middle age, was it—and now breadth is not a thing to boast about.

The first three models show the prevailing outline, and the fourth is being exploited as ultra modern in a show. Maybe this, in other words, will be the street silhouette of winter—although I shouldn't begin planning for it for the year coming.

Vionnet is setting the styles; we have been up there; all America on this side of the water has been up there, and is swimming itself in the lines of Vionnet, which are the lines of the first model. Of course she has more than one model, but she gives but one impression that can be retained. Her trimmings are on her skirts, she abounds in angles instead of curves, and apparently does not permit a wiry material in the house.

Her woolens are as soft as crepe de chines. She has an evening cape in beige with a deep yoke in shades of beige and brown. She has another velvet cape with a collar of roses, which can throw back into the old fashioned Lea effect. She is using straw on big, standing collars and on the cuffs of coats, in place of fur. Some of those points in which her skirts abound are outlined in fringe, and this is just about all I know on the particular subject of Vionnet.

If you ask me what next fall's outline is going to be, I'm not afraid to hazard a guess. It is going to be circular round the bottom, with sloping shoulders, like a beer bottle—if you can revive the memory of how one looks. And many of the coats, I prophesy, will be short.

But to confine ourselves to the present: A New York woman is wearing the Vionnet gown here on display. She is Mrs. Charles Jones, and she wore the dress one Sunday night at dinner at the Ritz. You can tell one of these models as far as you can see it. Usually it is of black and in a heavy crepey material that holds every particle of powder that ever spilled on it from a woman's vanity case.

This particular dress was made in powder blue crepe georgette. The bias ruffles running from the waistline to all points south of the hem were of the crepe, and the only departure in material or color was in the belt, which was silvery color, with only one end showing, and it finished with a heavy, flat tassel.

Again an American woman shows the styles. She, too, was at the Ritz, but this time for luncheon, and in a costume good for all day. It is a tailor of black cloth, carrying the simple, straight lines of the day, and supplemented with a tiny cape of caracul, located exactly where it will do the least good—unless you happen to be troubled with rheumatism of the shoulders. A black satin bow, like a cravat, holds it in place under the chin. The collar, which borrows inspiration alike from Henry Clay and Pierrot, is not a part of the tailleur, but of the cape, and it is made of ermine.

By the way, the dressmakers of Paris seem at last to prevail in their high determination to enforce standing collars and longer skirts. Both appear in larger numbers than during the years past.

The skirt is run up the left side with a narrow band of caracul, and a similar band goes the length of the sleeves. A tiny gray satin toque studded with silver beads completes the costume. It is covered with a small and delicate beige veil. The ensemble is a costume black, gray, and beige which is extremely smart, no less in line than in coloring. These are really the fashionable combinations of shades for spring. I suspect Lanvin of being the author of this creation.

The third offering is a model of a spring coat, than which there is nothing more difficult to get in Paris this season. The quest of the coat is engaging us all of every nationality at present assembled here—which is just about every nationality there is.

I saw a beautiful mantle on the Khedive of Egypt the other day which I should have liked dearly to own, but it is the only one I have coveted so far. This one, however, has a line far more chic and is more practical for every day. It is of old blue woolen material, soft and rough, the collar of which is white wool, embroidered in black to match the bands round the cuffs and down the sides of the kirt forming right angles at the waist line. Note how straight all of the lines fall and how bell shaped the sleeves are. The black and white lines are in a heavier, softer wool than the material of the coat (as is the collar), and they are "laid out in a path," as M. Patou, its creator, said in describing his creation.

The fourth silhouette is offered you at its face value. Make your own deductions as to its economic place in the wardrobe of the future. I can only say it is awfully attractive as displayed by Mlle. Parysis in "La Pucelle du Rat Mort." The frock is of white plaited tulle flounces, which are accented now and then (to use the descriptive phrase of the artist) with clusters of pink rosebuds. They are of exactly the same shade as the pelerine of taffeta, with its plaited ruche for a finish, which bands the shoulders in the back and holds in place by means of a ribbon that ties across the chest.

Vionnet gown of powder blue crepe georgette with silver ceinture.

Tailleur of black cloth with caracul cape and gray satin toque.

Old blue wool morning coat trimmed in white wool embroidered in black.

White plaited tulle ruffles with clusters of pink roses; pelerine of rose colored taffeta.

Teddy had an unreasonable fear of dogs. Thinking to cure him of this his uncle decided to get one for him. Teddy didn't much like the idea, but nevertheless when his uncle arrived with a small basket, the little chap dashed to the gate to meet him and inspect his new playmate. When his uncle produced from the basket a stubby tailed Boston bull, Teddy eyed it fearfully then said with a pout, "That ain't no kind of a dog to have. How'm I goin' to tell when he ain't goin' to bite? I want a dog with a long wag."

Arthur, who is taking lessons on the piano, dislikes to practice. Yesterday I was standing behind him as he was washing his hands preparatory to piano practice, and he was saying to himself, "Gee! I wish granny would have me take lessons on a drum instead of on the piano."

John was taught manners from his babyhood. At two years of age he knew that it was proper to remove his hat on entering a room or an elevator. He was in an elevator one day with his mother, the only woman present. He quickly removed his hat, but on looking up he noticed several men with their hats on. Somewhat surprised, he said: "All you mens, take your hats off."

Doris Blake's Answers to Love Problems

Have you a perplexing love affair of which you need the counsel of a friend? Write to Doris Blake, care The Sunday Tribune. If you wish a personal reply please send a stamped addressed envelope.

You Might Believe Her.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am in love with a girl 15 years of age. I once asked her to come to a dance with me. She refused, saying that she had to go to a party. Do you think she was bluffing me? Do you think that if she cared for me she would postpone that party and come to the dance with me? I am taking her out this week. She is the sweetest girl I ever met.

"ANXIOUS."

Why not accept the young lady's story and let it go at that? She gave you an excuse, and she accepted a later invitation. More encouragement than that you cannot expect.

She Can't Decide.

"Dear Miss Blake: I have been going with a fellow for a year and a half. He always tells me he loves me and talks about marriage often. I have kissed him a few times. But the thing is, I don't know if I care for him. Sometimes I feel as if I hate him. I wish you would advise me.

"PATIENTLY WAITING."

It seems to me it would be the proper thing to find out if you cared for a man before the kisses. I don't understand how you can act so free and carelessly, unless you have small respect for yourslf.

Tell Him No.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am a girl 18 years old an dam in love with a young man who claims he loves me dearly. Now, Miss Blake, he has asked me several times to marry him and keep our marriage a secret, as my parents object to my marrying yet, as I am too young, they say. Will you please advise me what is best to tell him, yes or no.

"ANXIOUS."

Tell him no, Anxious! Get your parents' sanction to the wedding if you have to wait a number of years. He has somethnig wrong in his makeup to urge you to the foolish step.

Difficult to Tell.

"Dear Miss Blake: Some time ago I was engaged to a young man who was a couple of years my junior. At that time this fact worried me considerably, and when the time came for parting, as we were both away from home, I gave him back his class ring, which I had been wearing, not being able to decide just what to do. Some time has now elapsed, and at first we corresponded quite frequently, but the last six months he has written but seldom. I know that I now love him, but some time ago he spoke of another girl, insinuating that no one else would ever hold first place, and recently he wrote that he supposed if business would pick up he would take the fatal step and said that he had expected that I would have been married long ago. Under the circumstances, do you think it would be proper to write him, saying something to the effect that I now regret that he is thinking of marrying, or do you think I should let matters rest where they are and not reply? I am anxious to do what is best for both of us. ANXIOUS."

It looks to me as though your chance was gone. Again, it may be that he writes you that way to make you realize your love for him. I just cannot decide what is in the back of his mind without more information.

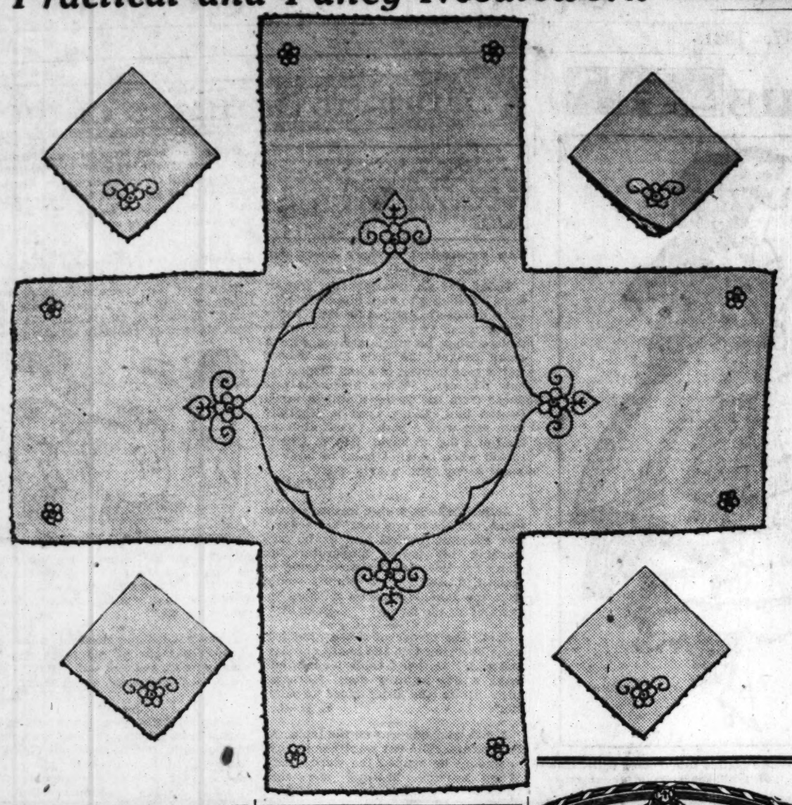
Good Looking and Spoiled.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am a girl 19 years of age and I am in love with a young man 25 years of age. He is good looking and all the girls flirt with him. I am jealous. Could you advise me what to do? He claims he loves me, but still he flirts with others to get me jealous. C. M."

You had just better do a little flirting yourself with other boys so that you will have some one to play around with after your Mr. Flirt has gone away. He is the flirting type. So get your heart all bolstered up for indifference after he is through with you.

Practical and Fancy Needlework

BY CLOTILDE



Questions on problems confronting the home sewer will be answered in this column or by mail if a stamped, addressed envelope is inclosed. Address Clotilde, The Tribune, Chicago.

A LUNCHEON SET.

An attractive way to serve luncheon for a bridge party is to have the guests remain at their card tables and set the tables with attractive sets like the one shown in the picture.

They may be made of Indian head or other linen finished cotton; of course, real linen would be still prettier.

The embroidery is done in French knots—all one color except the dots in the center of the small clusters. A contrasting color should be used here; blue for the main work and yellow for the single contrasting knot. The edge of the cloth as well as the doilies is finished with the single crochet stitch, with a picot edge set in at regular intervals.

The lunch cloth measures forty-two inches from end to end, and the arms are twelve inches across and twelve inches long.

French knots make rapid work, and this is bound to be a popular piece of fancy work, and will not be tedious, either.

Sidway
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. TRADE MARK
Reed, Fiber and Collapsible Baby Carriages

NOTHING is too good for "the dearest baby in the world." He rides royally in his Sidway Pullman Sleeper, enjoying all the comforts that its roomy body, full-box mattress, heavy corduroy upholstery and long, resilient springs can afford. Daddy and mother are proud of baby's elegant conveyance, with its graceful lines, its reed weaving of the most careful regularity, and its tasteful color scheme. Mother finds it well balanced—easy to turn and to lift up over curbs. And Daddy has observed with interest the angle steel bracing, the oscillating front axle which prevents baby from being pitched sidewise, and the hollow axles which give increased strength with decreased weight. Write for dealer's name and valuable book.

For bigger babies, the Sidway Park Wagon is all that can be desired. Graceful, distinctive, compact, easy to get baby in and out of! It's the show-vehicle of park and boulevard, yet most practical and comfortable. The design, the reed work, the corduroy upholstery, exhibit real craftsmanship. And this carriage weighs only 30 lbs. —not much more than baby herself.

Do you anticipate much travel by rail or motor? Do you have occasion to take your carriage up and down stairs? Then the collapsible Sidway of Elegance is the solution. It folds flat, fitting under Pullman seat yet is the roomiest carriage made. Its upholstery and hood are water proof and weather proof. The long leaf springs can be adjusted firmer as baby grows heavier—a feature you'll find in no carriages except Sidways.

For and By Business Girls

By Loretta King

Miss King will be glad to help business girls solve their problems. If you want a personal answer send a stamped, addressed envelope. Address Miss Loretta King, The Tribune, Chicago.

THE DESIRE FOR CHANGE.

THE spirit of unrest among business girls, evidenced by a constant tendency to change from one job to another, still prevails. It is, I suppose, one phase not yet outworn of the general restlessness that has disturbed the world since the war.

Dorothy has been subjected lately to occasional spells of it, resulting in a growing dissatisfaction with her job. I've been aware of the change in her for the last few days and a little apprehensive that she might give up her position without a word of warning.

If hers were merely an ordinary job that offered but a few slender opportunities I wouldn't have been disturbed by her apparent desire for a change. But the many promotions and salary increases she has had since starting there a little more than a year ago justified my conviction that the surest and quickest road to success for her lies through the firm she is with. Besides there are four or five women in that house who hold really big jobs.

When Dorothy finally voiced a desire yesterday to give up her present position and take a chance on a new one, I told her frankly that I thought she was foolish to change places now. She hasn't another job to step into, and, in my opinion, she would be turning down a fine opportunity for success. She might never come upon such another one.

"But I'm sick and tired of waiting for promotions that come so slowly. I want to get with a firm that will help me work my way up quickly," Dorothy grumbled.

Ann took a hand here and added her counsel to mine.

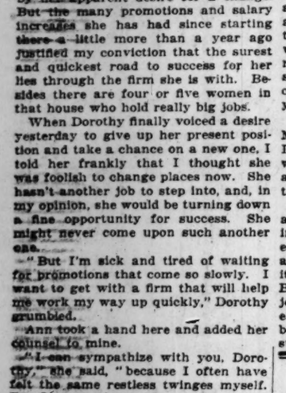
"I can sympathize with you, Dorothy," she said, "because I often have felt the same restless twinges myself. But I always knew that I had a good chance with my firm, so never gave way to the impulse to change jobs. I'd just grit my teeth when I'd get awfully tired of my job and stay on. Now that I'm pretty well established I've lost the desire to change.

"Judging from the business women I know," Ann observed, "the ones who've accomplished the most in their jobs and who have got the most out of them for themselves are the ones who've stuck to one line of business or one firm.

"If I didn't believe, Dorothy, that you had a pretty good chance at something worth while in that business I'd be the last person you know to encourage you to stay. But from what you've already got out of it and the prospects that have been offered you I think it's worth pinning your faith to. At any rate, don't give up your job now," counseled Ann. "You'll get over your discontent before long and you'll be glad you decided to stay where you are."

There was nothing, so far as Ann, Marion, and I could discover, to make Dorothy dissatisfied with her present work except her own impatience at the apparent snaillike pace she was forced to take toward a better job.

Of course, it is every business girl's ambition to keep moving—forward—in whatever line of work she has chosen. And when she finds herself hedged about by serious obstacles on her way it is time for her to find a new route. But a constant flitting about from one job to another—never staying long enough to be of benefit in one—or to benefit by it—is a decided deterrent to success.



WINNIE WINKLE, THE BREADWINNER—The Minister Calls.

A FRIEND IN NEED

By Sally Joy Brown.

When information is wanted by mail a stamped addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send parcels to The Tribune, but write for the address of the applicant and send direct.

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

"There are several suit boxes of silk pieces, velvet pieces, ribbon, and new wash goods, suitable for patch work, that I would be more than pleased to pass on to one wanting to do that work. Boxes are now ready and if I may know when they will be called for I will be sure to be at home. W. F. S."

"I have a request to make in regard to an old couple who will soon be married fifty years. She works at the factory where I do. She is not able to work, her health being poor, but must to support herself and husband, who is 72 years old and deaf, so that he cannot get work. I wonder if there is some kind reader who would like to make this dear old soul happy on her golden wedding day (which is the 22d of this month) by sending some little remembrance—perhaps a nice card or some fruit. They have no one to look to for anything, and she won't be able to work much longer. Her strength is fast failing her. They are American people. If you see fit to print this I will be grateful to you. MRS. E. M."

This is a very touching picture of old age that has been drawn by a woman eager to help. I hope some of my readers will feel its pathos, too, and help to make the golden anniversary of the elderly couple a happy one.

"I have some old numbers of 'Etude' which some one, who is interested in music and cannot afford to pay for, might have by calling next week.

"Hoping this small offer can brighten some one's weary hours, I remain, "K. H."

Thank you. I shall forward applications received to you.

Epsom Salts Like Lemonade

A few cents buys a handy package of "Epsonade Salts" which is real epsom salts combined with fruit derivatives, giving it the taste of sparkling lemonade. You get all the splendid physic-action of a dose of epsom salts without the awful taste and nausea. Try it when bilious, headachy or constipated.

Warning! Don't merely ask for "tasteless epsom salts" or you may get a soda imitation.

Ask for "Epsonade Salts," and then look for the name, American Epsom Association

Protect your gums to save your teeth

Why do three out of every four men and women over thirty years have pyorrhea in some form? Why, despite the daily tooth-brushing, do they suffer from bleeding, tender, spongy or receding gums—symptoms which, if unchecked, lead to the loosening and the loss of teeth?

The answer is "gum neglect." They use dentifrices which may keep the teeth white and free from films, but do nothing more.

Unless the gums are kept firm and healthy, infection starts in the gum tissue and spreads to the bony root socket which holds the tooth in place. The tooth itself may be sound, but the support is weakened and destroyed.

Pyorrhocide Powder was compounded for the specific purpose of maintaining gum health as well as tooth cleanliness. Unlike other dentifrices, it is more than a mere formula of the chemist's laboratory. Its efficiency has been demonstrated in actual pyorrhea practice and at clinics devoted exclusively to the prevention and treatment of pyorrhea.

Leading dentists prescribe Pyorrhocide Powder because it contains both gum-strengthening and tooth-cleaning properties of high effectiveness. It is medicated with Dentinol, a germicidal and healing agent widely used by the dental profession in the treatment of pyorrhea at the chair.

Pyorrhocide Powder keeps healthy gums healthy. It stimulates the blood circulation, maintains firmness and hardness, thus increasing the power of the gums to resist pyorrhea infection which constantly threatens.

If pyorrhea has already developed, Pyorrhocide Powder aids in repairing soft, bleeding, spongy or receding gums. It soothes the gums that are sore and inflamed.

The economical dollar package contains six months' supply. At all druggists and dental supply houses.

Free trial package to prove what real gum health means

Send coupon for free sample of Pyorrhocide Powder. Note how it leaves a refreshed, cleanly feeling of the teeth and gums long after brushing. To you who have used other dentifrices, it will prove a revelation. We will also send our educational booklet on the Prevention and Treatment of Pyorrhea.

The Theaters

By Percy Hammond.

MR. WOODS' behavior last Monday night in producing "Gertie's Garter" is causing much uneasiness among those who are imbued with a passion for the better things.

What are we to do, they say, with this rich and able fellow who employs his vigor, industry, wealth, and talents in unworthy enterprises like "Gertie's Garter," which teach us nothing and are of no propriety whatsoever. How shall his soul be saved and his better self developed for the common weal? Here he is, the chief vassal of the Shuberts, owning many theaters, actors, and plays, full of life and joy and eagerness, and in a position to do good to the needy drama. Yet is he deaf to the wail of suffering Thespis, though knowing, of course, who that person is; and he proceeds thoughtlessly, if not airily, along the poison ivy path.

Prayer or psycho-analysis? Are there sanatoria for ailing entrepeneurs, pathetic and commodious Pontiacs whither the theater's bad boys may be sent for instruction and redemption? Shall we have Mr. Woods examined? How best can we repair him—by the holy rollings of the Little theater evangels, the hot-gospelings of the devout and pious newspaper critics, or by the sane and silent treatments and supplications of the Drama clubs? Let us draft some resolutions and appoint a committee. A committee on Woods and illicit revenue adopting a memorial petitioning Mr. Woods to abandon the haymows, the nightshirts, the bathrooms, the garters, the leers, the questionable cafes, and other unworthy things of life for something by Shakespeare or Eugene O'Neill.

Since Mr. Woods has been instrumental in building for Chicago two new theaters (which is two more than have been built by the Shuberts, Mr. Orpheus, the Selwyns, William A. Brady, Sam H. Harris, Ziegfeld, Dillingham, and many others who feed greedily at our hospitable trough), Mr. Woods' viewpoint deserves some consideration. He has examined, it seems, the human race from his Broadway tower, and his diagnosis is pessimistic.

"If Shakespeare," he remarks, "were producing 'Macbeth' today, he would say, being a business man, 'Move that castle into the bedroom and put the witches in silk pajamas—they're wearing 'em pink in Scotland this year.' Shakespeare, he believes, threw as nasty a quill as Avery Hopwood or Wilson Mizner ever did, and his public ate it up. Does the public like these 'Gertie's Garters' and 'Up in Mabel's Rooms'? They cry for them, Mr. Woods says, like babies cry for Castoria."

"What I do is this," says Mr. Woods. "I lose a lot of money preparing noble things in the theater. Then I put on 'Gertie's Garter' and get it back, reserving a surplus to do other noble things to keep the critics and the Drama League quiet. If I didn't I'd be running a harness store in Syracuse, next to the Shuberts' hay and feed emporium."

I telephoned last night to get a list of the noble things Mr. Woods has done for the drama. His office force informed me that the entabulation of Mr. Woods' far-flung nobilities would require a month or six weeks, so numerous and varied are they. Mr. Woods' beneficences are like those of some deceased Chicago millionaires—liberal, bounteous, almost prodigal, though more or less invisible.

Mr. Woods' "Gertie's Garter" is a tough show. It is a dull, blowsy, frowsy, moronic, stupid, illiterate, sycophantic pander, framed up for well-housed, expense accounting tourists. Some of its lines and situations may shock you, if you are not asleep. But even that thrill is often denied you. Pretty women are seen in questionable postures, but at an awful sacrifice of one's intelligence.

I like, however, to laugh at the public, which goes enthusiastically to see a drama called "Gertie's Garter," and which finds it not in the least like Ring Lardner or Robert B. Mantell. I suspect they go, hoping to be made angry, and to be inspired to write to the newspapers in indignation. But you and I and Mr. Woods know that all plays are better than their audience, and that "Gertie's Garter" will lure no one to the Woods who is not equipped mentally and morally to understand its scarlet inferences. I was aged by "Gertie's Garter" and by its haymows, boudoirs, and sexly platitudes, but I recalled that it was a sacrifice of Mr. Woods upon the altar of expediency. "As Cleopatra says," remarks Mr. Woods, "give 'em what they want." A delegation of the local cognoscenti should call upon him and convince him that there is profit in psalms as well as in the jazzboes, and that life on the stage may have a purpose higher than the gartered knee of a pretty woman. Mr. Wood will have an answer for them.

GUY BATES POST'S "The Masquerader" has been censored in Boston because it contains a character who is a drug fiend. . . . The Sothern-Marlowes have begun to prepare for their biennial American tour, beginning next October, and plan to add "The Merchant of Venice" to their repertory. . . . Frank Keenan has acquired the Joseph Jefferson acting edition of "Rip Van Winkle," and will produce the play this summer. . . . Miss Nancy Fair, the English prima donna who sang here in "Monsieur Beaucaire," is now the leading woman of the Alcazar Stock company in San Francisco.

The Shuberts are to produce a musical version of Barrie's "Quality Street." Also they are rehearsing a revival of "The Belle of New York." . . . W. Somerset Maugham's "The Tenth Man" has been produced in Atlantic City with Miss Helen Freeman in the leading rôle. . . . Miss Vivian Segal has replaced Miss Juliette Day as the first singer in "The Dangerous Maid," produced last week in Pittsburgh. . . . An Inspired Margaret Anglin Seen as the Inspired Maid of Orleans

By James Whittaker.

NEW YORK, April 16.—[Special.]—Before the opening night of her production of "The Trial of Joan of Arc" Miss Margaret Anglin issued a proclamation to the public through the daily prints. She wished it known that she believed that France's defender and latter day saint was divinely inspired.

She seriously revived a conviction, prevalent among Champagne peasants and Paris clergy at the time of the second battle of the Marne, that the Maid Joan had marched on a cloud among the ally airplanes on the day Gouraud signaled for the secret barrage. And Miss Anglin subscribed to a belief that her heroine is ever living, watchful over the travels of Viviani and the travails of Briand, ready to appear again at the right hand of future heroes of France who may need forces greater than their swords.

One must forgive actors their publicity. Often the actor has something more than his part to say to his audience. If he sometimes chaffs you through his press agent, time will presently separate the chaff from the grain.

Miss Anglin was not chaffing. Those who saw her first performance of "Joan" at the Shubert theater came away in a mood which reflected a bit of the great spiritual energy which she put in her heart. I am not going to assert that I had a vision of St. Jeanne d'Arc hovering above the chandelier of the Shubert. But I admit that I felt in some current which flowed from Miss Anglin a presence which came from farther than her dressing room, and saw, at least once, in her transfigured person, a vision which was not Margaret Anglin, the well schooled, hard working actress of "The Woman of Bronze."

She transcended her limitations.

Miss Anglin herself would not have picked Miss Anglin as the ideal Joan. Before she took up the study of the lines of the play, which Emile Moreau prepared for Sarah Bernhardt, she must have noted that her person has more of the womanly than the virgin warrior, that her voice is a sympathetic reed more than an heroic clarion, and that the appealingly twisted mouth out of which she fittingly said the words weak and of outraged womanhood of "the woman of bronze" was not shaped to smile the glorious smile of Joan in communion with her heavenly voices.

It was not her requirement and talent, but her flaming inspiration, which served Miss Anglin. With it she made a greater Joan than Sarah Bernhardt's, and suddenly and completely consigned Miss Farrar, who did a Joan for the movies, to oblivion.

The Moreau play is a moderate and devout dramatization of the last days of Joan's life, beginning in a superfluous, text-booky act of exposition of her internment in a Rouen prison by the British and the treacherous "packing" by promises of preferment of her jury of prelates and the framing of the

The Meaning of Values

Some people think that because a garment is low in price it is a value. This is not always true. Value means something more than low price. It means low price and high quality. Many low priced garments look well for the moment, but second grade materials, skimped seams, cheap trimmings soon tell in poor wear.

Such Garments Are Not Values
They Are Merely Cheap Merchandise

Katharyn Sheahan's values are something different. They are garments that represent the best in material, in tailoring, in finish. They are garments that have quality style, for which you should be willing to pay more. But because of our small overhead, enables us to sell at much less than you can buy this same quality merchandise elsewhere. We are now doing a volume of business and can afford to sell on a smaller margin of profit at prices which mean real and consistent values.

SUITS

The essential points to study in a Suit are its style and its material. Is the Suit smart? Is it correctly tailored? Does it become the line of your figure? And is the material so firmly woven that it will retain its shape through all weather and all wear? The Suit values we are offering in this demonstration meet every one of these demands, or your money cheerfully refunded.

The Theaters

Age." . . . Channing Pollock, while in London, disposed of a new play to Miss Marie Lohr. A. H. Woods will produce it in America. . . .

MISS WINIFRED V. GUTHRIE, a student in the Medill School of Journalism, accompanied her class one night last week in an investigation of THE TRIBUNE plant. After a thorough scrutiny of the great presses, the drama critic, the mailing machinery, the typesetters, the breathless editorial writers, the reporters with "spattered boots and frozen locks," the wireless, cable, telegraph, art, etching, and Beg Pardon sections of the paper, she announced herself as most impressed by the department of the theaters. So she wrote the appended article about it. Read and grow wise in:

PERCY HAMMOND in the flesh (lots of it) is disappointing.

"My dear," murmured a fair esthete, waving memory away with a slim white hand and a beaten silver ring, "when I can forget how the creature looks, I shall resume reading his reviews, but not until then—not until then," and she shivered, the undulations of her silk draperies registering distress.

He's fat, not lusciously plump, or pleasantly placid, but grossly fat. I told him I was disappointed. "I expected any one who wrote such trenchant phrases would be artistically thin . . . "with an eyeglass," he added, chuckling.

Discovering that one's idol has clay feet is tame compared to discovering that he possesses a "bay-window."

Journalism is responsible for the disarming revelation. The class was being conducted thru THE TRIBUNE plant, and in the local room we bumped into Mr. Hammond. Washburne had him introduced, much to Mr. Hammond's confusion. The girls—flappers, older and worse—crowded around, fussing him to blushes. Undoubtedly the man contemplated flight, but they had him backed up against a broad pillar, and the half circle flanking him was determined. The dear girls confided their secret ambitions into his burning ears. They expected sage advice, sparkling epigrams, grave remarks on the decadence of the drama. But Percy got red and uncomfortable; his eyes dropped before the battery of quick tongues and inquisitive eyes; he stuck his hands in his pockets and shuffled his feet like a sixth-grade boy trying to recite a piece.

How disappointing to many fond, fair admirers who have pictured him easily languid, tremendously bored, but being pressed to say something doing it deftly, with malice toward none and humor toward all.

Perhaps the charm of a Hammond review lies in its elusive verdict. You never can thank Mr. Hammond for sending you to a good show or keeping you away from a poor one. When your eye dots his last period, to go or not to go is still the question. His puzzling words leave us subtly flattered, but undecided.

Reading Hammond for information is not recommended, but for adding to one's vocabulary he may be profitably perused.

There are so many reasons why one follows what Mr. Hammond has to say. Not agreeing with his viewpoint, you find his reviews pleasantly irritating; enjoying his slant, no show yields you its fullest chuckle or faintly suppressed yawn.

No other dramatic reviewer can so successfully praise with faint damns, or so loudly damn with seeming praise, as Percy. These tricks delight his readers.

Now if that too revealing bulk betrays him to his rapt readers as naturally honest, genial, and generous hearted, they will lose faith in the wit of his dissertations. If it should be discovered that Mr. Hammond is not a satiated reviewer, supercritical, aloof, cynical, one trembles for his popularity.

If Mr. Hammond's object is not the nimble exercising of his diction for our uplift and education, but his concern is for accurate reviews, where, O where comes the flavor?

Commenting on Mr. Lansing's narrative of the peace conference he deems him "an expert at animadversion." A psychoanalyst would read self-confession there, and surely Percy is touching on the Hammond technic when he further comments, "He knows the sly art that removes the boost from the knock."

The softly-draped, white-handed, silver-ringed votary of the arts has sufficiently forgotten and again reads "The Theatres," by Percy Hammond.

Says Mr. Kaufman in today's New York Times:

Now that the peace treaty is more or less out of the way, Tom Fields, Joseph Weber, and Nora Bayes have decided to start something to excite the public interest. Their venture will concern a musical revue, no less, in which the trio is to be costarred. Florence Moore is to be starred in a farce by a new author the coming season under the direction of A. H. Woods. The playwright in question is Charles George, a native of Hagerstown, Md., and willing to admit it. While the piece is at present entitled "Good-by, Mable." The farce has been tried out by a stock organization that has held forth for several seasons at Union Hill, N. J.

The ticket speculator who asked $20 each for seats for the opening of "Clair De Lune," as recorded hereabouts a week ago, seems to have been trafficking in something that he would have been unable to deliver. The terrific demand for tickets for the Barrymore opening—thousands upon thousands of dollars were returned—has made it possible for the Empire management to select its first audience with as much care as it selected its cast, and in these circumstances, as may be readily imagined, the ticket brokers have not fared particularly well.

With biographical plays already dealing the prospectus for next season—Poe, Cromwell, Lee, and others are to tread the boards—there now looms in the offing a play with Lord Byron as its central figure. Brock Pemberton will be the producer.

Pretty Shirley in Another Touching Cinderella Role!

"THE LAMPLIGHTER"

Produced by Fox. Directed by H. M. Kinball.

THE CAST.

Gerty ..... Shirley Mason
Willie Sullivan ..... Raymond McKee
The Lamplighter ..... Adelbert Knott
Malcolm Graham ..... Edwin Tilton
Sally ..... Iris Ashton
Philip Amory ..... Philo McCullough
The Housekeeper ..... Madge Hunt

By Mae Tinée.

THERE is nobody who waifs better than Shirley Mason. She can be the most forlorn, scraggly-haired, dirty-faced, vacuous-eyed and lipped small human any producing company has found up to date. Thin little arms she has and lean little hands. Her small body is straight up and down, like a boy's, admirably fitting rôles where one must look wistful and hungry. Yes, some waif is Shirley! But how, with care, feeding, and a dress or two, she can blossom out!

"The Lamplighter" was made from a book—by whom written I forget. Reckon, though, the author must have known somebody like Miss Mason, for the rôle is hers alone.

Gerty the slavey, isn't that, when ushered into life. She is the wee heroine in a domestic melodrama. You see, it was this way.

The rich Malcolm Graham had a beautiful daughter. The beautiful daughter loved a man the rich Malcolm Graham did not. When the young man asked his permission to wed the daughter he was ordered away with harsh words. He went. But——

While father was away on a trip a secret marriage took place.

The trip was a long one. He returned home to find in his daughter's boudoir, who but the despised young man! During the scene which takes place the daughter faints. Her husband by mistake wets a cloth in acid and puts over her eyes. She is blinded.

Well—the father, not knowing of the perfectly good marriage certificate sends the husband away by causing a false message, presumably from his daughter, to be delivered. When the baby arrives he steals forth in the night with it and gives it to a sailor. His daughter believes that the child has died.

In time, then, the baby is known as Gerty, and she is slavey in a boarding house conducted by the sailor's wife, who is a brutal woman and beats her when she lets the cat drink up the milk.

A kindly old lamplighter who also does a bit of gardening for Mr. Graham takes pity on the little girl and adopts her.

"Bring the child to see me," says the gentle blind daughter of the now terribly repentant father, who has been raising heaven and earth to find the child and the child's father. (Mr. Amory has gone away—where nobudda knows.)

So—Gerty's life meets and mingles again with the lives of those who belong to her and in time—well—see the picture for the happy ending.

Miss Mason's work having been duly commented upon, it becomes time to say that her support is capable. The toothy and curly Mr. McKee, as the lamplighter's assistant, qualifies pleasingly as a husband to be. (They're both too young while the picture lasts.)

The story is nothing to turn handsprings about, but it passes an hour pleasantly just the same, and the photographer proved that he was worth his salary.

MISS GERTRUDE BARR STATE and LAKE "Ashes"

King Vidor has bought the screen rights to "A Thing Apart" by Lucy Stone Terrill. First copies, it is said, are not yet off the presses. He must like it!

They say that Charlie Chaplin is spending all his spare time these days trying to make his mother forget the horrors witnessed in London during the war, which resulted for her in a nervous breakdown. When Charlie's not at her side his brother Sid is. It is thought that Mrs. Chaplin will recover.

Because Mary Garden declared that she passionately admired Mr. Hart's work in the pictures, the western favorite has bestowed upon her the famous sombrero worn by him in many films.

Alice Brady and her husband, James Crane, are spending a short time in Bermuda.

Ask Me! Ask Me! Ask Me!

PATSY H.: You bet I will! Mahlon Hamilton was Daddy Longlegs. A letter will reach Wallace Reid if addressed in care of Lasky, Hollywood, Cal. Mr. Hart has his mail sent to Hollywood. (Evvybuddy knows him.) Kathlyn Williams is at 264 South Kingsley drive, Los Angeles. And now I reckon you're going to be the busy little letter writer!

A. F. G.: None of the books you mention have, so far as I remember, made their way screenward as yet. In "Th' Ol' Swimmin' Hole" Marjorie Prevost was Esther, and Laura La Plante was Myrtle. Does La Plante make you think of rhubarb? It does me. Wonder what's the dem'd psychological significance of that?

JOHANNA: All right, next time I'll send my unkind remarks in the envelope. Hope you get a ticket. I don't know what ax and gander you refer to, but I'd love to hear the goose story. Awfully glad to have heard from you once more.

C. J. W.: "The Prince Chap" was taken from the play by the same name by Edward Peple. Y'wekkum.

SOLID REASONS

MR. F. T. HARMON,
Care Dreamland Ball Room,
Chicago, Illinois.

For the past several weeks you have repeatedly made the statement that Elgar's Band is in a class by itself. I don't believe that I am going too far when I say there is only a thin veneer of truth in your many statements.

If you can—please explain in what essential respect does Elgar's Band differ from other bands?

MR. SEIGEL:
We wish to strongly impress upon your mind that Elgar has been crowned King of improvised Music in the musical world. His name is listed in large type in all preferred mailing lists of every musical publisher in the country.

The one and great reason which makes Elgar's music in a class by itself is their original idea of improvising all of their numbers according to the rules of harmony which puts that pep in the dance music WITHOUT THE JAZZ.

Also wish to impress upon your mind that Elgar's music is responsible for Dreamland being the most widely talked of ballroom in the country. We emphatically say, without fear of contradiction, that Dreamland is the only ballroom that can claim an improvement of 40% in business in the past year.

Mr. Seigel, take any Metropolitan train to Marshfield station or any surface line to Van Buren and Paulina, and we will very readily convince you why we are forced to continually repeat THAT ELGAR'S BAND IS IN A CLASS BY ITSELF!

Yours truly,
HARMON'S DREAMLAND

"Art Begins Where Technique Ends," Says Auer Thesis

By Ruth Miller.

LEOPOLD AUER, whose celebrated and indefatigable pupils comprise a goodly portion of the concert violinist's peerage, comes forth with an unpretentious and straightforward brochure, titled "Violin Playing as I Teach It." This master pedagogue condenses his sixty years' experience into a brief little volume of some 200 pages.

Not all the tricks of his trade nor all the winning dodges of the expert fiddler does he reveal therein. But one is permitted to glimpse the main outlines of the granite foundation upon which the facile art of Heifetz, Elman, Zimbalist, Kathleen Parlow, Toscha Seidel, Eddy Brown, Max Rosen, and Thelma Given was founded.

It is a large and imposing crop of fiddling celebrities that has flourished because of the warm beneficent sun of Prof. Auer's tutelage. And he has turned these deft manipulators of the catgut and the horse hair out so fast and each so incredibly perfect that for a time his studio was known to the irreverent as the "Auer factory."

This superinstructor and his pedagogical ways are the basic reason for "Humoreske" chirriping on every talking machine record. He has done more for the violinistic uplift than any musician living or dead. Who could be better qualified to speak of the art of violin playing "as I teach it"?

Modestly he disavows having made any novel discoveries in regard to the prevalent habit of violin playing. Technically he declares that the last word has been said and many times. He lauds the masters of the nineteenth century—Baillot, De Beriot, and Spohr. He vouchsafes the lioney word of praise to the modern authorities who have enlarged upon and explained lucidly and lengthily the principles underlying the fiddler's art.

Then he explodes all their carefully worked out formulae for the making of a perfect Paganini by saying that the essential factor had been overlooked.

"By no means enough stress has ever been laid on the importance of mental work," he pronounces, "on the activity of the brain which must control that of the fingers. And yet, unless one is capable of hard mental labor and prolonged concentration, it is a waste of time to undertake the complicated task of mastering an instrument as difficult as the violin."

Mr. Auer—unlike a famous contemporary of his—does not assert that he can make any one, irrespective of natural endowments, play the violin. He demands that nature be prodigal of her gifts, particularly those physical. The fingers must not be fat nor flaccid, too short or weak. A keen sense of hearing, a flair for rhythm, and l'esprit de son metier, the intuitive instinct of the professional man for the detail of his profession, are also listed among his requirements for an aspiring fiddler. Give him a child, in other words, who is a born violinist, and he will make him famous.

In a brisk chapter, rhetorically stripped of all padding and flourish, he relates how he studied the violin some seventy years ago in a little town in Hungary. But for all its uncompromising verbal simplicity Prof. Auer has written many a paragraph of unconscious pathos between the blunt lines. Looking back, he finds that those earlier lessons are dimmed in his memory by three score years and ten, and his uneasy, anxious groping for forgotten details saddens just a little.

After this briefest of autobiographical résumés he launches into the business of his book, with instructions on how to hold the violin and the bow. Therein he chants the litany of the violin teacher. "Sing, sing on your violin! It is the only way in which to make its voice tolerable to the listener."

He speaks of tone production in a conclusive fashion which invites no dispute. There is a silo of stored wisdom in his remarks on that pastime which is regulated by law abroad, known as practicing.

With the shrewd pronunciamento that "art begins where technic ends," he takes up and explains those terms bandied about by the music commentators—"nuance," "style," "tradition," "color," "warmth," "temperament," "individual magnetism," "phrasing," and "musicianship."

He chats reminiscently of nerves and violin playing. It is his opinion that there is no remedy, hypnotic or medical, capable of curing or temporarily paralyzing that form of nervousness known as stage fright. It is an affliction that takes many forms.

Prof. Auer quibbles not at admitting that from his earliest youth he has always been troubled with extreme nervousness which does not leave until he has played the first composition on his program.

The younger generation, which denies so long and loud the existence of the tightened pulse, the throbbing temples, and the tonsils which interfere with their swallowing during their public performance rather puzzles Prof. Auer. I think down underneath his pride in them their arrogant nonchalance fills him with querulous annoyance.

He closes with a practical catalogue of compositions likely to enrich the répertoire of the seriously determined fiddler.

It is a sane, honest, and sensible little treatise. There is no romance or romancing in it. It is matter of fact, but never dull. The fact alone that the man who wrote it receives $2 for every minute that he teachos and teaches every minute that he will when he comes to our town would save this compact textbook from the stigma of stupidity.

Miss Anglin Seen as the Maid of Orleans

charge of witchcraft and devil worship on which she was finally condemned.

The play belongs to the Bernhardt period when that distinguished cripple was already having her dramas written to spare her legs. The second act, telling of Joan's appearance before her robed judges in a council chamber of the castle of the Duke of Bedford, English regent of France, presents her immobile in the center of the stage with the whole of the action encompassed in the gestures of her arms.

When she could no longer move a foot, Bernhardt could so move with her voice that tremendous events and acts took place within the range of her golden octave. Miss Anglin had to do without that voice. She proved, as it is rarely but then splendidly proved by great artists, that perfection is sometimes attained by the taking of great hurdles.

Miss Anglin needed wings to take such a hurdle as the second act of Joan presented to her unsuited person. When she lost her whole personality in the fictive one of her heroine from the moment she walked into the center of the stage in short tunic and boyish cropped hair, the spectator lost sight of Miss Anglin's grossly feminine curves and sound of her flagrantly female voice, and saw and heard in her stead the slender visionary of Domremy.

The difference between Miss Anglin's and Bernhardt's Joans is the difference between the demoniac and the angelic. Bernhardt seems always animated by a superb diabolism. In this play Miss Anglin seems buoyed by a thrilling mysticism.

I can well remember the fifteen year old thrill of Bernhardt's denunciation of her judges as ungodly mercenaries at the top of the crescendo of the second act.

"The voices of your 'saints' are the voices of demons," thundered the indicting bishop.

And Bernhardt, with an anger that smelled more of brimstone than incense, turned on her accusers with battle in her voice.

Here is where Anglin topped Bernhardt—rose above the anything but divine Sarah with a manner in which there was no anger, but the higher note of the martyr resolved henceforth to defend, not with sword and arquebus, but with faith, the glory of her trinity—Truth, God, and France. I feel like stealing Bernhardt's adjective for the new Joan, and dubbing her the divine Margaret.

John Drinkwater has fallen a few degrees in my estimation since I have seen Moreau's Joan in its English version. Originally the plain, honest workmanship of an uninspired writer who submerged himself in reverence for his subject and turned out a play the strength of which is no more than the strength of the veracious story of Joan and then translated by equally honest but uninspired workers, "The Trial of Joan of Arc," is a play which sweeps you off your critical base. It seems a greater play than Drinkwater's "Lincoln."

Apparently there are a few persons who have lived lives which make plain Joan's is a story which not even a Canadian reporter could ruin in the telling. I suspect both Mr. Drinkwater and Mr. Moreau of playwright proof material. It is exceedingly fortunate for both of them that history is not copyrighted.

OUT LOOKIN' FOR A JOB

Only the Farms Were Calling, and While Many Were Called, But Few Were Chosen

BY ONEY FRED SWEET

IN the brief stretch of Canal street between the Union and Northwestern stations the fact that industry is pausing to catch its breath is hinted in the sight of battalions of able bodied men lounging about the employment offices. There are few pink and green signs in the windows calling for men to work here, there, and everywhere. The signs that do remain are like the banners of last year's circus—they linger because of neglect in taking them down, but they are meaningless save as reminders of the glittering days that were.

I went into the street the other day looking for a job. It is not a pretentious street, because the new Union station environs are under process of reconstruction and it has been a section of semi-chaos in appearance for some time. But it is not a dismal street, because it vibrates with architectural promise, and the sun shines there with all of its springtime sparkle.

On the east side of the street the commuter hurries to and from business along the temporary board walk and the stranger with baggage saunters leisurely with eyes of wonder for the skyline of "the loop" just across the river. It is on the west side of Canal that no one walks with brisk step. Since October it has been "the street of the unemployed."

They Sit or Stand and Wait.

On the west side of the street men in unpressed clothes and flannel shirts and slouch hats stand about in listless groups. They sit on the curb. At times they stroll in country town fashion over to the east side of the street where the preoccupied wearers of unpolished shoes click past. The men in the flannel shirts are waiting for "things to open up" and they know that Canal street has its ear to the ground and will be the very first to feel the word.

Being in search of a job, I crossed to the flannel shirt and the slouch hat side of the street. On the corner my attention was attracted to a gentleman who stood behind an opened and elevated suitcase filled with what I later on discovered were magnifying glasses. He was demonstrating the merits of the "little instrument" in a voice that was unmistakably magnetic. He even had a dramatic manner of using a blue bandanna handkerchief to wipe off the lenses through which he gave those about an opportunity of peering.

"If it were not for the merit of my goods I would not be doing business in times like these," he remarked as he wrapped one of the glasses in a paper of instructions and handed it over to a bystander in exchange for a quarter. "We will say you get something in your eye. Do not rub it and create a blood swollen condition. With the glass you will find a mirror attachment that will enable you to locate the tiniest particle of dust."

Somehow he had plenty of purchasers when the psychological moment came for him to cease talking and start sales. His elocution seemed to be irresistible. Perhaps his customers thought the magnifying glasses would enable them to see the labor situation more clearly. His article struck me as being a peculiar one to be offered among men to whom the possibility of a mote in the eye was remote and the need of a quarter imminent. I guess the answer was that he was simply one of those sure fire salesmen and his wares incidental. And he did remove any skpeticism about the glass being able to magnify. Dogged if he didn't. I looked through it myself.

A Diamond for $1.98.

I didn't waste any more time listening to him than was necessary, because I had a job to land, and you've got to land a job before you can consider most anything else. I went on down the street. Where the saloons used to be there were new enterprises, the raised letters of the word "beer" having been removed from the signs and only the shadowy marks where the letters had been remaining.

I Went Looking for a Job.

There was the window of one place of business that contained nearly everything and everything marked in prices like $1.98 and $2.49—articles of clothing, diamond rings for your fingers (great big diamonds for $1.98), souvenir cards with clever sayings on them to send to your friends to show them what a good time you were having in Chicago, and paper backed books with titles like "Night Life in Paris," "Her Husband's Secret," and "Career of the Younger Bros."

Then came the row of employment offices. I went into A. A. Johnson's and I found the room filled with men and tobacco smoke. No discussions, no arguments, no opinion. There was all the calm of a Quaker meeting.

Two types were there representing many nationalities. Two types—the hobo and the farm hand.

The hobo—seeking to ship out for construction work on the railroad. He of the migratory nature, longing to get back to Chicago and longing to leave it again. Accumulating no baggage, scorning unnecessary apparel—even a necktie. Unused to farm work, and the farms, except in harvest time, not wanting him.

The farm hand, not particularly fastidious about the cut of his clothes, but distinguished by a certain cleanliness as demanded by employers past and prospective. A "white collar man" when dressed up. Left the farm in great numbers during and following the war, and ready for the first time in several years to go back.

Farm Work Only Thing Open.

Half way to the back of the dim room there was a counter behind which the agency man was standing. It was a hobo who got in ahead of me with Mr. Johnson.

"Any shipments?"

"Not a thing new," said Mr. Johnson, with a shake of his head. "Nothing but farm work for first class men."

Then he looked me over and repeated with a wave of his hand, "No, not a thing."

"But you said you had farm work for first class men."

"Yes, but no railroad work. A year ago I could put a sign up out there for you fellows—yes, a dozen signs. Fifty-five cents an hour and double time on Sunday for track work. Four or five men at the door trying to pull you in, and none of you were at all interested. If I put up one little sign now we'd have every man in the street in here so quick you'd break the counter down in the rush."

"But one of those farm jobs?"

Mr. Johnson leaned over and spoke louder for emphasis. "I said experienced, first class men. I'm sending out fifty a day to middle west farms. Ninety-nine per cent of Chicago wants to go on a farm this year. Different than it was the last few years. Everybody wanted a factory job then. Now they want 'three squares' a day and are willing to leave the jazz music and movies."

"What'll you pay me on one of those farms?"

"They're paying first class men from $45 to $50 a month, with board, room, and washing."

"How much did they pay a year ago?"

"O, a year ago! Seventy-five to $90 and couldn't get 'em. Couldn't get 'em the last three years."

* *

Too Good to Be True.

"And farming's the only thing open?"

"That's all right now."

"I'll take a farm job."

"Did you ever work on a farm? How long? Can you milk?"

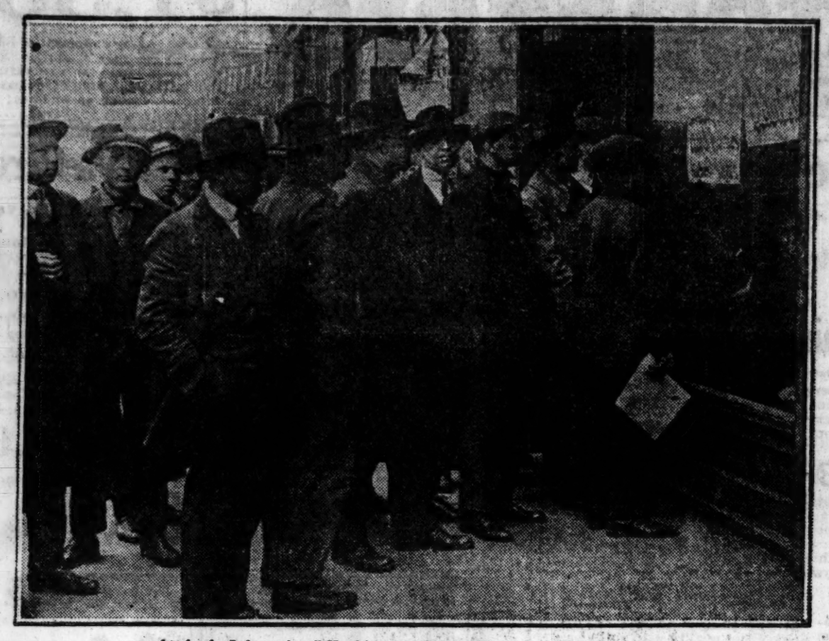
"Sure, I can milk."

"How many cows an hour?"

I studied over that question—studied too long. Finally I ventured, "About fifteen."

"Can't you do better than that?" encouraged Mr. Johnson.

"Well, maybe about twenty."



At A. A. Johnson's—"Nothing but Farm Work for First Class Men."

"Can't you do any better than that?"

"Well, maybe about twenty-five in a pinch."

You'd a thought my making it strong that way would have helped, but it didn't."

"Can't use you at all," decided Mr. Johnson, glancing off over the room. "Because no human being could do that. You're better than a milking machine." Then his eyes rested directly upon me. "Look here, young man, there's no use in my sending you out to a farm. Suppose a store got an order for shoes and sent out a hat? They'd send you back on the first train. You haven't had any farming experience. If you had been an experienced man you would have answered right off snappy, anywhere from seven to eleven when I asked you how many cows you could milk.

"To be a first class farm hand you should have worked on a farm winter and summer from three to five years. You've got to be a sticker, know how to feed stock and a lot about tools. And when you plow you've got to be able to keep a straight furrow. A bum farm hand does more harm than he does good. Farm land's too high in price now to have any bunglers on it. It's different than it was a few years back. The only kind of men the folks who write me want are clean cut fellows, who understand farming the same as any other trade."

And he said the farm jobs were the only jobs to be had.

The North and the South.

I went back to the sunshine of the street. It was alive with impatient taxis and rumbling trucks—the city had not ceased with its roar. And out in the fields the plowing and planting had begun. But in the vicinity thousands of men were waiting and wondering.

A colored youth bought an orange from a Greek's fruit cart, and, peeling it with his knife, sauntered leisurely to the curb.

"Dogged if it ain't dull," he mused. "I see in the paper the other day where there was 4,000,000 people in this town and 3,000,000 of 'em out of work. Here it is April and pretty soon May."

I asked him if he had come up from the south.

"No, sah. Don't do fo' a no'therner to go down there."

"Do all right," contradicted another colored youth, who was standing near. "I lives in Alabama."

"Do all right—nothin'," gloomed the one with the orange. "No'therner down there's got to keep it hid."

"Naw, you ain't got to keep it hid," enthused Alabama. "They'll bury you down there an' everything."

The mournful expression of the possessor of the orange gave way to a 100 per cent smile. Enthusiasm over kindness associated with burial seemed to reach his sense of humor.

Out of Work All Winter.

An aged Mexican sat in the doorstep of the freighthouse.

"How is it with you, Pete?"

"Tough," he answered in perfect English and with quivering lips. "Been out of a job all winter. Used to be timekeeper on railroad jobs. I walk over to a mission on the north side for breakfast, to a mission on Michigan avenue for dinner, and to a mission on Van Buren street for supper."

A tall youth wearing clothes that had once had a dash about them and a shirt that was soiled but was silk—striped silk—mentioned the fact that he had been to twenty places that morning looking for a job as cook.

"You'd think a cook could get a job," he puzzled.

He was overheard by a fellow wearing an army campaign hat, a khaki woolen blouse, and a pair of new blue overalls. His lips were set in a determined and serious angle and his eyes were narrowed as if with bitter reflections. "Lots of fellows besides cooks are looking for jobs," he would tell the world.

"Do you think the fact that you're an ex-service man will help you any in getting a job?" I questioned.

"O, that's all been done away with," dismissed the wearer of the soiled silk shirt. "Help any? Not a damn bit. I was at Bordeaux for eight months cooking for the front line trenches. Been up in Detroit all winter. Thought maybe I could get a job cooking for a railroad camp. All they got is farm jobs. Asked me what kind of a plow I'd ever used—gang or sulky. I'd never used either kind, and he said about all I'd be good for on a farm would be as 'table finisher.'"

I asked him what he was going to do.

"If nothing turns up by tonight I'll go over here and grab me a flock of passenger cars for Missouri. Ship my grip, put a clean collar in my pocket, ride the 'blind,' get off the train in the morning, wash up, put on the clean collar, and pay the folks a visit."

But the ex-cook, looking for a job with a railroad camp, had only dropped in on Canal street for the day and, according to his announcement of plans, would be gone that night.

The "Bo" Philosophizes.

It was from one of the hobos who had been along the street all winter and who had shipped out from it many a season—it was from one of the regulars—I gleaned:

That he was troubled with the rent problem to the extent that his room in the "flop house" had risen from 10 cents to a quarter a night. That he had figured a depression was due and had saved some of his "jack" last fall. That he did not worry, because a 'bo never worried. That he was not thinking one way or another about prohibition, but had no intention of buying anything that sold for $20 a quart. That he was thankful that it had been a mild winter, although the nice weather had hurt the ice cutting jobs. That he sympathized with the bird out of work who had to come across for a high priced flat and maintain a certain standard of living. That he thought the Negroes better off than the foreigners because they would speak English and would work at anything—as bootblacks and porters. That he thought the Mexicans were the worst off. That he was reading the papers and keeping well posted on the news of the day. That he was supplied with tobacco and was inclined to be stoical and good natured. That he would like to be back on a job and was watching every minute for some agent to put up a "banner" in the window. That the winter would have been tough if wages hadn't been good last summer and work plentiful. That the world had gone 'round for a good many ages past and would probably go 'round for a good many ages to come. That he thought things would "open up" pretty soon. That he was in good health except for a bad case of "spring fever."

The Voice of Experience.

Up from the lower waiting room of the Union station came a family, the shawls of the women, the quaint cut of the men's clothing, the queer shape of the baggage, and the expressions on the faces proclaiming them immigrants, newly arrived in The Land of Beginning Again.

"If that agent across the street asks you how many cows you can milk," I advised one of the big fellows who couldn't understand a word I said, "better not hesitate at all, but say from seven to eleven, and make it snappy."

The WELL-DRESSED MAN

The Clothes to Don at the Honk o' the Horn

By Alfred Stephen Bryan.

NEW YORK.—Come now the days which bring a gypsy urge for open spaces; for the smooth, straightaway road; for the rhythmic purr of the motor and the ambrosial luncheon served at the Hotel Under the Tree. What are the fashions in automobile clothes for 1921? Brace yourself for a shock—there are none.

The primary consideration in a motor car is comfort. All else is subservient to that. To step into an automobile "groomed to a hair" is self-evidently silly. You will be stiffly uncomfortable, and so will everybody else who rides with you.

Motoring is not a social function, but a personal pleasure which should be enjoyed in plain, practical clothes directly suited for the purpose. However, neither is it wise to wear rough and tumble things resurrected from the attic. If you tour there are many occasions when after a hasty brush-up you wish to look presentable, and the well dressed man is always well dressed, regardless of time, occasion, and circumstances involved.

The most trim and comfortable outfit for the automobile tourist is the knickerbocker suit and wool stockings, borrowed from golf. They leave the legs unincumbered, and there is a consciousness of freedom about having no flapping trousers on which is most agreeable.

Portrayed here is the motoring coat of dustproof linen or mohair, tussah silk, showerproof gabardine, or twill. It has raglan shoulders, deep patch pockets, storm strapped sleeves, a flip-up collar, and spreading, full draped skirts with extension plait.

Automobile caps of the type shown come in waterproof tweeds and homespuns, plain or plaid; also wool velour. They have broad crowns, deep visors, and often a plaited top or back to lend added flexibility.

Silk hose, in spite of the recent vogue of wool, is just as smart as ever. The designs most favored may be cordovan brown, navy, gray, or other shades, with three rows of clocks embroidered on the side in ditto or contrasting color. Instep embroideries are new.

The Strange and Sudden Vogue of Walking Sticks.

Plain white silk shirts are still favored by young men, who like them because of the brightly striped scarf which may be worn. These are to be had without a collar and French double cuffs or with a turndown self collar and single round wrist cuffs—so cool.

They Laugh at This in Vaudeville

PALACE.

Kate Elinore and Sam Williams:

"Have you any recommendations?"

"Not now, but I can get them in two months."

"Why do I have to wait that long?"

"Well, my former employer couldn't take a joke. When he went to sit down I pulled the chair out and when he hit the floor he got sore."

"Do you know anything about stews?"

"Well, I oughta; I married one."

"The sun will come in your room all day."

"Whose son?"

"Do you go with policemen?"

"Not willingly."

"Marriage is no longer a joke."

"No, it's a yoke."

"How did your first husband come to marry you?"

"He didn't come to marry me. He came to buy a hammer, and I nailed him."

"What kind of work does your husband do?"

"He manufactures cigar ashes."

"A woman is nothing but a rag, a bone, and a hank of hair."

"Well, there are plenty rag pickers."

"Are you a new woman?"

"No; I'm an old one painted over."

"Your legs are too short."

"Well, they touch the ground, don't they?"

"How do you compare the chorus girls of today with those of thirty years ago?"

"Why, they're the same girls."

"After all, we are descendants of the monkey."

"No, we are not. My folks all came from Wales."

"My grandfather may have been a monkey, but that doesn't worry me."

"Maybe not, but I'll bet it worried your poor grandmother."

McVICKER'S.

Ling and Long:

"That was an awful fall you had just now."

"Did you see me fall?"

"Yes."

"Have you ever seen me before?"

"No."

"Then how did you know it was me?"

"Who else could it be?"

"I'll ask myself."

"Pa told me to meet you at the train and bring you to the farm."

"Talk louder; my eyesight is bad."

"Where have I seen your face before?"

"I've always carried it in the same location."

"What is your name?"

"Twenty-five minutes after four."

"No, no; I want to know your name."

"Then perhaps my watch is fast."

"What's that?"

"A fly."

"Nonsense, a fly couldn't make all that noise."

"Ah, but this is a horse fly."

"Where were you born?"

"I don't know."

"Why not?"

"I wasn't there."

More Than Speed or Climbing

POWER means more than brute strength. The power of the Standard Eight is not the power of the motor alone, any more than the strength of a man means big biceps alone.

Power in an automobile involves the relation of motivity to weight, the co-ordination of balance with mass. This gives a responsiveness that is quick and sure. It is what the golfer puts into his drive that gives him long distance without apparent effort. It is what the billiard player puts into his shot that gives a long roll to the balls without seeming to shoot hard.

Driving a Standard Eight gives you the same sort of pleasure you get when you play a game extremely well. You are exhilarated every minute of the while, you are not fatigued at the end, and you look forward to doing it again.

WILLYS-KNIGHT

Improves with use

The Motor With Second Wind

In the ordinary poppet-valve motor deterioration sets in in the first mile.

In the famous Willys-Knight Sleeve-Valve Motor deterioration is postponed indefinitely. So perfect are its basic principles that it actually improves with use up to 50,000 miles.

Up to that point its upkeep is negligible. Sometimes it is nil. And after that point is reached, it is then ripe and ready for years and years of faithful performance, and remains an economical car to the end of its days.

President's Message Adopted as Basis for Renewed Drive Against Good Roads Neglect in Illinois

BY J. L. JENKINS.

SENTIMENT for state patrol and maintenance of all Illinois bond issue roads reached fever heat last week. President Harding himself led the new attack against the ancient mud enemy in his message to congress. He pointed out the enormous financial waste suffered each year through inadequate care of highway trade arteries and urged immediate federal supervision of this work on roads where government funds have been expended.

"Highways, no matter how generous the outlay for construction," said the message in part, "cannot be maintained without patrol and constant repair. Such conditions, if insisted on in the grant of federal aid, will safeguard the public, which pays, and guard the federal government against political abuses which tend to defeat the very purposes for which we authorize federal expenditure.

"I know of nothing more shocking than the millions of public funds wasted in improved highways, wasted because there is no policy of maintenance. The neglect is not universal, but it is very near it. There is nothing the congress can do more effectively to end this shocking waste than condition of federal aid on provisions for maintenance."

The president's public recognition of highway transportation as a vital development and of the motor car as an "indispensable instrument in our political, industrial, and social life," won hearty indorsement from every organization in Illinois working for the advancement of the highway era. A wave of meetings have been called since the message was read and resolutions adopted by automobile clubs, manufacturers and retailers' associations, and highway bodies, reiterating demands for immediate action on the Illinois paving program.

Another boost was given the popular maintenance sentiment by the tour of Wisconsin roads made by Gov. Small and more than 100 Illinois legislators. They found that Wisconsin has succeeded in keeping its main highways open and in fair to good condition preparatory to paving by the system of state maintenance and patrol advocated for Illinois. A. R. Hirst, Wisconsin highway superintendent, guided the party over typical trunk lines and proved that even dirt and gravel roads can be made to sustain country traffic until such time as they can be permanently improved. He made it plain that the famous Wisconsin patrol system is not an end in itself, but rather a highly necessary step in the preparation of any state highway system for permanent hard surfacing.

It is believed that the growing agitation will result in the drafting of a new law turning over all roads in Illinois, designated under the state aid and bond issue systems, for state maintenance. Men who have made a study of highway conditions ever since the bond issue went over, agree that the big mistake in the Illinois program as first drafted lay in failure to compel the proper maintenance on roads picked for paving under the bond issue. In practically every case, they point out, county and township officials have allowed these, the most important of their highways, to go to rack and ruin.

"Why spend money on that road?" has been the usual question. "The state is going to pave it." And in four years the state has failed to keep its promises.

Lake street to Elgin is cited as a typical example of this neglect, and the same neglect may be seen on practically all of the designated roads outside of Cook county. The neglect does not stop there, according to highway authorities. It exists in the townships where roads are waiting for county construction, and so all down the line.

"The construction deadlock in Springfield that has already delayed this year's hard road program beyond hope of any substantial improvement in mileage this season, makes the turning over of the entire bond issue system of roads for state maintenance an absolute necessity," declared a Chicago authority following the Wisconsin tour.

"Patrols can be set on all the roads and repairs can go forward at once while we are waiting for the long delayed construction that will bring Illinois to its rightful place in highway transportation. Automobile licenses will pay for this maintenance. Of course, it will be expensive. It will cost $620,352 a year to maintain the roads that have been graveled alone. But it will allow us to at least ride over our important highways until they can be reached with the $60,000,000 bond issue and we can be given permanent roads."

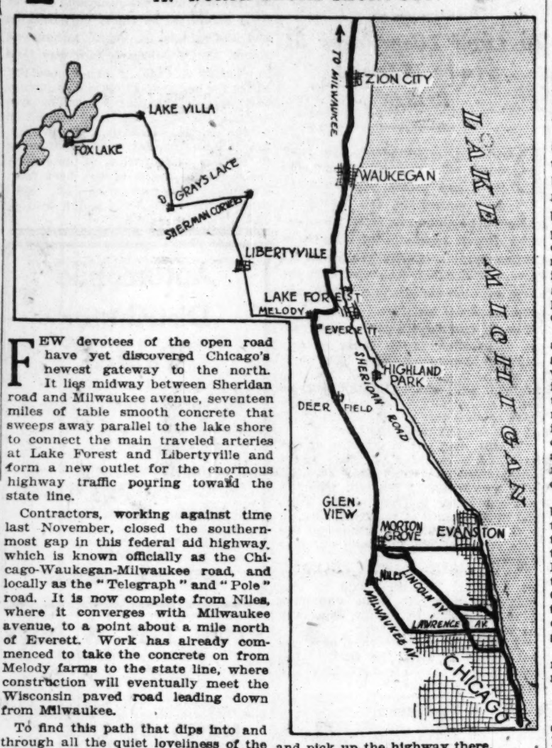
II. NORTH SHORE SHORT-CUT.



FEW devotees of the open road have yet discovered Chicago's newest gateway to the north. It lies midway between Sheridan road and Milwaukee avenue, seventeen miles of table smooth concrete that sweeps away parallel to the lake shore to connect the main traveled arteries at Lake Forest and Libertyville and form a new outlet for the enormous highway traffic pouring toward the state line.

Contractors, working against time last November, closed the southernmost gap in this federal aid highway, which is known officially as the Chicago-Waukegan-Milwaukee road, and locally as the "Telegraph" and "Pole" road. It is now complete from Niles, where it converges with Milwaukee avenue, to a point about a mile north of Everett. Work has already commenced to take the concrete on from Melody farms to the state line, where construction will eventually meet the Wisconsin paved road leading down from Milwaukee.

To find this path that dips into and through all the quiet loveliness of the north shore countryside, tiny settlements, thriving towns, and rich leagues of green gardens, go north from the loop in Michigan avenue and Sheridan road to Bryn Mawr avenue. Turn left, following Bryn Mawr to Ridge avenue; bear right to Peterson avenue; turn left in Peterson to Lincoln avenue; turn right and continue northwest on the concrete through Niles Center to Morton Grove. Take Dempster street west to the first right hand concrete road and turn north.

Motorists north of Edgewater may follow Sheridan road to Dempster street in Evanston and turn left to the new road. West siders may take the boulevard system north to Milwaukee avenue, turn north with it to Niles and pick up the highway there.

From Niles the new road runs north and northwest through Glenview, Shermerville, Deerfield, and Everett to end in the construction barrier at Melody farms crossroads. North bound traffic should turn right on this crossroad to Lake Forest and connect with Sheridan road for Milwaukee at Lake Bluff. If you're bound for the lake district, turn left to Milwaukee road, north through Libertyville to Sherman Corners, left with the concrete road to Grays lake, and north through Lake Villa and the Fox Lake road. Milwaukee avenue into Libertyville is graveled and in fair condition at present. It is certain to be rough later in the season, but there is still no better route to the Fox lake district.

Joint Convention to Demand Action on Highway Bill

DELEGATES from every state in the union will attend the joint annual meeting of the United States Good Roads' association and the Bankhead Highway association, which opens tomorrow in Greensboro, N. C., in conjunction with the United States good roads show. The big convention, one of the largest in point of numbers and general interest ever held for the exclusive advancement of better highways, will have as its prime object the spurring of congress to immediate action in appropriating federal aid money to the various states for highway building.

Leaders of both associations are aroused over the failure of the last congress to reenact the "federal aid" bill with its $100,000,000 appropriation for interstate road building. They plan through the convention to launch a movement of popular sentiment for improved roads that will result in record breaking construction during 1921 and 1922 and the drafting of a definite national policy in connection with the distribution of federal highway funds.

Thomas H. McDonald, director of the bureau of public roads, will be among the chief speakers. He will address the convention Tuesday on "Our National Road Problem," Senator Charles E. Townsend of Michigan, author of the Townsend highway bill; Senator Claud Swanson of Virginia, and executives of practically every state highway department are included in the program, which will end April 23.

A huge exhibit of highway materials, machinery, and engineering developments will be a feature of the week.

GOSSIP OF THE AUTO TRADE

THE Triangle Motors "gang" threw dull care to the winds and declared a holiday last week when sixty-five new Haynes cars were driven away from the factory and into the Chicago sales territory. Jay Colvin, distributor, mobilized practically his entire Chicago forces together with the subdealers and invaded Kokomo for the celebration. The big drive-away marked the opening of real optimism in the Triangle organization, according to its officials.

A committee of 100 Chicago automobile men will meet this week to make arrangements for the reception of thousands of tourists from cities throughout the central west, who will visit Chicago during the Pageant of Progress and aquatic fête to be held at the Municipal pier July 30 to Aug. 14. Tom Hay, president of the Chicago Automobile Trade association, is in charge of the campaign to fill all roads entering Chicago to the brim with visiting cars during the industrial pageant.

The handsome new display rooms built at Milwaukee avenue and Logan square by Charles Lange & Brothers, Buick dealers, were formerly opened yesterday. Hundreds of northwest side motor enthusiasts attended the opening.

THE UNIVERSALS.

These are perhaps the most neglected parts of the mechanism, because they are generally the hardest to get at. The universals must be kept properly lubricated or they will develop intensive wear. When they have worn the universals emit a heavy thump each time the clutch is thrown in.

18 Cylinder Motor Is Undergoing Preliminary Test

"W" Type Power Plant Expeeted to Givc 700 H. P.

THE power plant section of the air service engineering division at Dayton, O., is engaged in preliminary tests of a 700 horse power model "W" aircraft engine. This engine was designed entirely by the power plant section and was assembled in the McCook field shops.

The engine is designed to develop 700 horse power at 1,700 r. p. m., and is of the water cooled "W" type, having eighteen cylinders arranged in three rows of six, the angle between cylinder banks being 40 degrees, giving included angle between outer banks of 80 degrees. The cylinders are 5½ inch bore by 6½ inch stroke, having four valves per cylinder and provided with welded steel water jackets. As great reliability was one of the fundamental points in the design, provisions have been made for use of four independent magneto systems, although where it is desired to reduce the weight, one or two magnetos may be admitted. Throughout the design every effort was made to secure a strong, reliable construction at a moderate value of horse power per unit weight. The weight of the completed engine is 1,720 pounds when equipped with four magnetos. This weight includes all ignition devices, carburetors, propeller hub, flange, and bolts, but does not include any water nor oil.

The tests so far conducted prove conclusively that the engine may be relied upon to deliver the rated horse power in service, as the power obtained on the dynamometer showed a considerable margin in excess of the required 700 horse power. Tests are progressing satisfactorily and a surprisingly small amount of trouble has developed so far. As soon as the preliminary power determinations are completed the engine will be put on the fifty hour test to study its endurance.

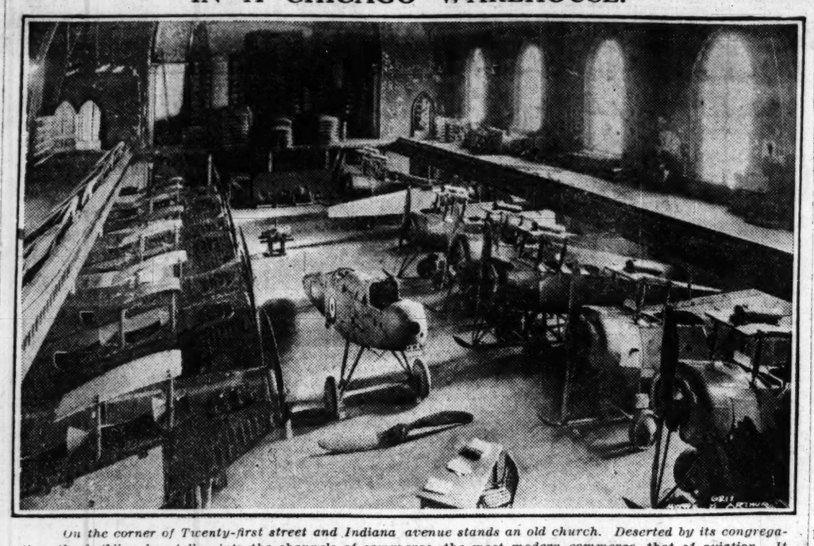
New Ship.

The Huff-Daland biplane, one of the newest types of heavier than air craft to be constructed, has been delivered to the air service at Bolling field, Washington, D. C. The ship is being set up and within a few days will undergo some preliminary flight tests.

This new ship has a wing spread of thirty-seven feet. It stands eight and one-half feet high and has no over-all length of twenty-three feet. Its loaded weight is 2,800 pounds, which includes gasoline for two hours and five men, including the pilot. The empty weight is approximately 1,750 pounds.

The plane is equipped with two Anzani engines totaling 200 horse power. Its gasoline capacity is forty-five gallons. The speed ranges from 90 to 100 miles an hour. Its over-all factor of safety is about six, and the ship takes off in about eight seconds.

IN A CHICAGO WAREHOUSE.



On the corner of Twenty-first street and Indiana avenue stands an old church. Deserted by its congregation, the building has fallen into the channels of commerce, the most modern commerce, that of aviation. It now houses more than a score of airplanes owned by the James Levy Aircraft company. In the "warehouse" are Canadian Curtiss ships, some Avro ships, some flyin g boats, and two or three seaplanes.

La Pere at McCook Touches 30,000 Foot Altitude

LIEUT. J. A. MacCREADY, pilot, and Roy F. Langham, observer, have been doing considerable high altitude flying of late. They are using a La Pere biplane, equipped with a 400 horse power Liberty motor. The engine is fitted with a Moss supercharger and, due to this, satisfactory results are produced. Lieut. MacCready and Mr. Langham made a flight on April 4, leaving McCook field at 10:05 and returning at 12:20, reaching an altitude of 30,000 feet. A temperature of 35 degrees below was encountered at the ceiling, with a ground temperature of 43 degrees.

The weight of this airplane is 480 pounds more than the weight carried to 31,800 feet by Maj. Schroeder in 1919, when he brought back the two man altitude record.

This flight, together with other high altitude flights recently made at McCook field, is an indication of the reliability of the high flying equipment, and a new record may be expected when a plane is trimmed down in weight and advantage taken of every possible factor that contributes to a record climb.

Disturbers.

An ordinance regulating flying over schools, hospitals and other immune points has been presented to the city council of Pasadena, Cal. The ordinance will make it a misdemeanor for planes to fly within a certain distance of buildings marked with a white cross on their roofs, and certain restricted districts will probably be specified.

Leaves Chicago.

Stanley E. Knauss, who has been closely connected with the sale of commercial aircraft since the war, and who for the last two years has been sales and advertising manager for the Continental Aircraft, Incorporated, has been made sales manager of the Stout Engineering Laboratories, Inc., Detroit, and will assume his new duties immediately.

Production on the new Stout commercial airplanes will begin shortly in the Detroit plant. The Stout commercial ship was tested last fall and the performance was somewhat greater than had been anticipated.

Frisco Air Service.

Macuzzi Bros., aeroplane manufacturers of Berkeley, are planning next spring to establish an air passenger service between Richmond, Oakland, San Francisco and Sacramento, it is announced through the chamber of commerce. It is proposed to put a six passenger plane in this service and to maintain a regular schedule.

In Africa.

The South African government has now appointed an air board to deal with aerial legislation, the development of aeronautics in South Africa, and with proposals for the establishment of mail and passenger service. The board is constituted as follows: Sir William Hoy, Sir Robert Kotze, Sir Roland Bourne, Messrs. H. W. Twycross (postmaster general), A. D. Lewis (director of irrigation), G. O. Smith (commissioner of customs), with A. C. McColm acting as secretary.

Air Taxi Service Opens Today from Edgewater Beach

To Land Loop Fares at State Street Bridge

BEGINNING tomorrow the busy north side business man who frets and fumes when his car gets stalled in the boulevard traffic will be able to fly from the Edgewater Beach hotel to the loop in a Curtiss Seagull. Today Walter E. La Parle, a Chicagoan who served in the naval aviation service in the war, will open his aerial taxi line.

The air taxi service will extend from the Edgewater Beach hotel to any point the passengers desire. The service will be in operation daily. Trips to the loop, sight seeing flights along the north shore, and speed or long distance cruises can be had for the asking and the paying of the fare.

"A man may get in my ship at the hotel and be walking on State street eleven minutes later," said Mr. La Parle yesterday. "We will take off from the water in front of the hotel, land in the mouth of the river, taxi up to the boulevard link bridge or the State street bridge, and land our passengers."

The Seagull carries three passengers and a pilot. The pilot said he was going to "cater" to those who have never had a ride in the air, especially the women and children.

"I think I can convince any one that flying is safe," he said. "Let them take one ride and all fear will have been overcome."

ON CREDIT.

Between 45 and 50 per cent of all automobiles sold in this country are marketed on some deferred payment system.

New Designs.

In the first open aeroplane design competition to be conducted by the navy department five designs for a new type of naval plane have been accepted on preliminary examination out of forty submitted by thirty corporations and individuals, it was announced March 25. The competition was held to develop a type of plane specially suited for use in spotting and control of battleship gunfire at sea. The five designs, including one each submitted by the Curtiss company and the Dayton-Wright company, will be subjected to a final examination to determine the order of merit of the best four. These will be purchased at sums ranging from $16,000 for the best to $3,000 for the fourth.

The Program of 1921 Is the Pledge of 1900

Most miles per dollar is the pledge of service on which the structure of the Firestone Organization was reared.

It is beyond any fluctuating policy and is bigger than any program.

This explains the rally of new dealers everywhere to the Firestone standard. They who have weathered the recent difficult period are determined to play safe in the future. They are wide awake to the value in Firestone stability.

They want the Firestone strength behind them.

They know that the pledge of most miles per dollar is much more than a slogan—it is a guiding principle which has enabled the Firestone Organization to grow steadily and surely; to accumulate the fund of resources which is a tower of strength in time of trouble.

Most miles per dollar outlasts temporary business changes and means more than a sale of miles—it means friends for the Firestone representative—it makes him a dealer in security.

FARM AND GARDEN

Gladiolus Easily Grown and Ranks High in Garden

By Frank Ridgway.

OUT of the jungles of South Africa many years ago came the gladiolus, with its tender sword-shaped leaves, to fight its way into its proper position in the flower kingdom. It was half starved, tattered, and torn for want of culture when it came from its home in the cape region. In spite of its condition, botanists recognized its kingly characteristics and the possibilities of giving it a prominent place among the other royal families of flowers.

In America today the gladiolus is a supreme ruler in flowerdom and bears the distinction of being the only flower that is able to exhibit all colors of the rainbow. With its varied uses the gladiolus has become so important that thousands of acres are grown under the eaves of Chicago. Hundreds of acres are grown here in Cook county alone, and are grown on a tremendous scale in Michigan and Indiana.

Gladioli Easily Grown.

Few know that the greatest bulb growing industry in the whole world is developing and centering in Chicago, and many claim that it promises to overshadow the Dutch tulip industry which is centuries old. Both bulbs and flowers of the gladiolus are being grown on a large scale around Chicago, and the cut flowers are handled here on the market by the millions every season from about the Fourth of July until frost in the fall.

Gladioli are so easily grown that many do not need to buy them as cut flowers. All that is needed is a sunny spot around the border of the lawn, or a little space in one corner of the vegetable garden.

Not only are bulbs being grown extensively in this country but new varieties of gladioli are being produced by expert plant breeders. This flower has become a horticultural wonder on account of the amazing improvement attained in size, color and form, through breeding.

Though not a native of this country, the climate here is more favorable for its growth and development than the European climate. American horticulturists have rapidly excelled gardeners in Europe, not only in the production of bulbs but in the origination of new varieties of the gladiolus.

Name Is Unfortunate.

It is truly unfortunate that the gladiolus has never been given a common name, a fact that has no doubt had much to do with preventing it from crowding to the top much sooner. The Latinist still scolds the practical flower gardener for laying emphasis on the sixth letter in the word gladiolus. According to the "manufacturers" of such words, the stress falls on the letters "d" and "i." They called the plant gladiolus, meaning "a sword," because of its long, slender leaves tapering to a sharp point.

Following the lecture of a horticulturist on "Flowers for the Amateur" at a recent meeting of several hundred clubwomen, gladiolus was given first place when a vote was taken on the particular flower the women liked best.

After the meeting, a woman who grows hundreds of flowers in her suburban flower garden, remarked that it was hard for her to say which flower she actually considered her favorite. "I like all of them," she said, "but if I were compelled to choose from my garden one single flower, a flower that I could rather have than all the rest that grow in my garden every year, I would pick the gladiolus."

Partial to Sandy Loam.

The horticulturist himself ranked the gladiolus high in the list of flowers which he recommended to amateurs. He pointed out that the gladiolus was an excellent plant for the inexperienced flower gardener because it is easy to grow, the bulbs are inexpensive, the plants are free from insects, they offer a wide range of color, increase rapidly, furnish blossoms over a long period each season, new varieties are easily produced, and the bulbs are easily carried over from year to year.

The grower does not have to wait a year for the plants to bloom. Bulbs planted this spring will bloom this summer. In most cases the blossoms come out within about three months after the bulbs are planted. They will stay in bloom for at least eight weeks and frequently longer, depending on how early they are planted. Plants that are started early often begin to bloom about the middle of June and continue to bloom until the frost kills them.

The gladiolus is not only easy to grow, but will do well in almost any kind of soil, while the plants seem to be partial to sandy loam. The principal requirement is plenty of sunshine throughout the entire day. Shrubbery furnishes an especially good background for the gladiolus. When the planting is done in front of the shrubs there is plenty of contrast for the flowers when they are in full bloom.

Planting the Bulbs.

The planting of gladioli depends largely upon what the flowers are to be used for. Where they are to be used as cut flowers it is probably best to plant them in straight rows along the border of the vegetable garden, but, for strictly garden decoration, they may be planted promiscuously in the waste strips of the garden. It is best to plant them in a different bed each year and never grow them in the same place more than three years in succession.

While the gladiolus will do fairly well on a variety of soils, the best flowers are produced on rich soil. Prepare the soil as early in the spring as possible. Spade in an abundant supply of rich garden soil where the bulbs are to be set. Before the bulbs are set scatter a liberal supply of lime and bone meal over the surface of the bed and work it into the soil until both materials are carefully mixed to a depth of two or three inches.

The gladiolus may be planted in such a variety of ways that it is one of the most attractive garden flowers. Showy, bright spots may be added to the garden or lawn whether the plants are grown in round, square, or oval shaped beds or in long borders.

Have Furrows Deep Enough.

The space left between each bulb depends upon the size of the bulb. The average distance in beds is about three inches in the row, leaving just enough room between the rows for hoeing. A simple way to plant the bulbs is to open up a furrow deep enough that the bulbs may be covered with four or five inches of dirt. If planted shallow the plants bend over easily, often exposing the bulbs to the sun. Some cover them about two inches deep at first and rake in more dirt as the plants grow.

From the time bulbs are planted until the end of the blooming season the ground must be cultivated frequently. It is probably best to have the rows a foot or more apart where the gladiolus is being planted for cut flowers.

Always plant the bulbs right side up. For a succession of bloom where plenty of space is available the bulbs should be set from time to time until about July 1. Begin planting as soon as it is warm enough to work outdoors, and set out more bulbs about every two weeks. Bulbs that are sprouting should be planted first.

After the plants come up the ground must be kept free from weeds. They respond to plenty of water, but the watering must be done after sundown.

Cutting the Spikes.

Gladiolus is primarily a cut flower, and as such it is a strong competitor of all other plants. Cut the spikes when the first bud opens, and if kept in water in the house every bud will open. In cutting the spikes leave about three leaves on the bulb roots.

As soon as the foliage turns brown in the fall the bulbs should be pulled up and stored, after having been cured in the sun or in a cool place. Store them in trays or baskets. Wherever Irish potatoes will keep, gladioli bulbs will be safe. Storing in a cool place, where the temperature is about 40 degrees Fahrenheit, is considered the best.

In selecting varieties to plant this spring you should have no trouble in getting all sorts of colors with marvelous and infinite variety—spotted, striping, splashing, and blotching of petals. There are thousands of varieties from which to choose.

Slams of Life

By J. P. McEVOY

TO A DANDELION.

Above the lawn you shyly raise
Your eager, wistful, artless gaze,
And bravely, innocently, press
To greet the ardent sun's caress,
Unmindful that you are the locus
Of my deliberative focus.

For mine the joy to think, mayhap
A potion broods within your sap,
To dream so shy a bloom as you
Will soon distill a kickful brew:
'Tis not a dandelion I see
But a great potentiality.

To others you are but a flower,
Born to die within the hour,
But I behold a rarer bloom,
Predestined for no common doom,
For when your vital flood let loose is
'Twill join my pancreatic juices.

How sweetly solemn is the thought,
With such benevolence 'tis fraught,
That this a timid little tot is,
Ordained to dew my epiglottis
With feelings bonae voluntatis,
And permeate my diaphragm
With a cool and coruscating ca'm.

Grow on, dear dandelion, O grow!
You've my permission, as you know.
No hand shall touch, no foot shall tread
The tender glory of your bed.
Some say you're wild as wild can be,

FREE Ten Delightful Shaves

We Asked 1,000 Men—

"What is your conception of the ideal shaving cream?"

By V. K. CASSADY, B. S., M. S., Chief Chemist

For many years we have been making the ideal toilet soap. We blended palm and olive oils—the balmy cosmetics of age-old fame. And millions of people have adopted this Palmolive Soap.

Six years ago we started to embody this blend in a shaving cream. And the first step was to ask a thousand men the virtues they wanted in it.

These were their requirements:

First, a quick shave

Acts in one minute

Nine-tenths of those men wanted quick shaves, above all. They did not like long brushing, finger rubbing, hot towels and delay.

So we made a cream which acts in one minute. Within that time the average beard absorbs 15% of water. And that is enough. This result is due to almost instant oil removal—the oil that coats the beard.

Next, liberal lather

Multiplies itself 250 times

Next, they wanted liberal lather. And they wanted a little of the soap to go far.

So we developed a cream which multiplies itself 250 times in lather. A bit on the brush—only one-half gram—suffices for a shave. A single tube of Palmolive Shaving Cream serves for 152 shaves.

Lather that remains

Maintains itself 10 minutes

Then they wanted a lather which maintains itself without drying on the face.

So we perfected a lather which maintains its creamy fullness for ten minutes. That is ample time. This lather does not need replacement.

Leaves the face soft and smooth

A soothing soap

They wanted a soothing shaving cream. They wanted a lubricated razor, no irritation, a pleasant after-effect.

The best way ever known to those ends is our blend of palm and olive oils. The lather is a lotion in itself.

We made 130 creams

We are experts in soap making. But it took us 18 months to attain this ideal shaving cream. We made up and tested 130 formulas. Thus step by step we attained these supremacies, and the best shaving cream in existence.

Now we ask you to test it. Learn in how many ways it excels. It will lead the way to a lifetime of delightful shaves.

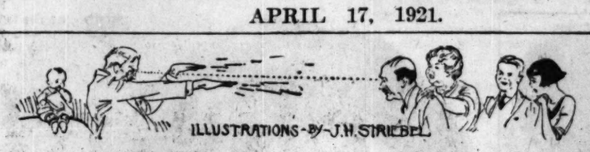
THE POTTERS



ILLUSTRATIONS BY J.H. STRIEBEL

by J. P. McEvoy

PROLOGUE.

Man is the only animal that rents. Birds have their own nests, foxes their dens. Only man "hath not a place to lay his head." And man, so 'tis said, is the only animal that can laugh. A foolish provision of nature, it would seem, for the man who rents has nothing to laugh about.

You will recall that the rent for the Potter flat was doubled, and the Potters were told they could pay it or move—when, as a matter of fact, they could do neither. So they joined the Tenants' Protective league and decided to stand—or rather sit—pat. In their front window, blazoning the Potters' defiance to the world, hangs this sign:

UNFAIR LANDLORD DEMANDS
Unreasonable ADVANCE IN RENT
THIS APARTMENT
WILL NOT BE VACATED
MAY 1st
Do You Want to Buy a Lawsuit?

Scene—The Potter Living Room.

PA: You think you're real clever—you think you're all jake,
When you're telling the landlord to jump in the lake,
But what if he eases you out on your ear!
Where do you s'pose we'll be going from here?

MA: We're not going to go—we're going to stay;
He can't put us out—

PA: O, he can't, did you say?
Who told you he can't, what's preventing him, eh?
You watch, we'll be out in the alley some day.

MAMIE: It's funny that he didn't whine
About our putting up the sign.

BILL: Perhaps he hasn't seen it yet;
He'll whine enough when he does, I'll bet.

MA: Well, he can whine for all I care.
That sign is going to stay right there.

PA: I wish I'd a signed.

BILL: Now, dad, don't do it.

PA: But where will we find . . .?

MAMIE: Let's stick to it.

BILL (looking out window):
O, here he comes now!

PA (dolefully):
I knew it, I knew it.

RECITATIVE.
Down the street
With ominous tread
And smoldering eyes
And visage dread,
The landlord comes
To raise old Ned—
And his heart is as hard
As last week's bread.
He comes in the gloom
Like a dolorous doom.
(As Poe would remark):
Ululume! Ululume!

LANDLORD (entering):
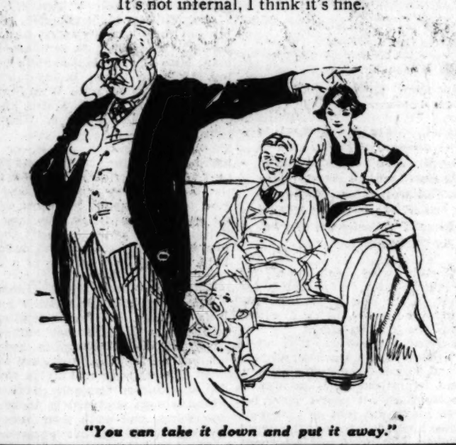
Good evening, Mr. Potter. . . .
Mrs. Potter, how-do-you-do.

MA: We're pretty well this evening, but
We owe no thanks to you.

PA: Now, Ma, don't snap his head off.

LANDLORD: I came for a word or two.
I want to know just what you mean
By that infernal sign I've seen.

MA: I s'pose you mean that "Unfair" sign?
It's not infernal, I think it's fine.



"You can take it down and put it away."

LANDLORD: You can take it down and put it away.

MA: I certainly won't take it down, I'll say. . . .
There it is . . . and there it'll stay.
And I'll stay with it till Judgment Day.

LANDLORD: You mean to say
If Judgment Day
Should happen to fall on the First of May,
For that's as long as you're going to stay . . .
On the First of May you'll be on your way.

MA: We'll be right here on the First of May,
And the day after that, and the following day.
Here we are and here we stay,
And I'd like to see you move us away.

PA: Aw, let's sign up and cut the row.
I'm ready to sign right here and now.

LANDLORD: Here is the lease all ready to sign.
Just put your name on the dotted line.

MA (snatches lease):
Have you read this lease? . . . Do you know what's in it?
I've heard all about it . . . just listen a minute!

. . . Lessee shall keep the said premises and the walls, ceilings, floors, woodwork, paint, plastering, plumbing, pipes, fixtures, kitchen ranges, globes and glassware and appurtenances thereto . . . in good repair. . . . Lessee likewise shall replace broken or wornout parts of kitchen ranges or appurtenances or appliances thereof when the same shall have been lost or broken by the Lessee or any other person. . . .

Which means that you have got the face
To ask us to pay to fix YOUR place,
And if that wreck of a stove should break
WE'D have to pay for repairs YOU'D make.

BILL: That stove usta park in Noah's ark.
You guys must think a tenant's a mark.
Repair that ruin? . . . Say, have a heart!
If you scrambled an egg it would fall apart.

MA: What the Tenants' League told me is hardly one-half. . . .
Just listen to this if you want a good laugh.

. . . If Lessee shall vacate or abandon said premises or permit the same to remain vacant or unoccupied for a period of ten days . . . lessee's right to the possession of the demised premises, thereupon shall terminate, with or without any notice or demand whatsoever. . . .

In other words, we couldn't go
Away for a visit a week or so
Without our having to let you know
And get your permission—ha! ha! ho! ho!
Here, take your lease and run along.
You're all wrong! You're all wrong!

LANDLORD: You'll sign that lease
And you'll pay the increase,
Or when next we meet
You'll be out on the street.

"Just listen to this if you want a good laugh."

PA: Well, just for that
We'll stay in the flat
And we'll not sign the lease
Nor pay the increase . . .
And you can threaten and sue
Till you're black and blue.
Good-by, good luck,
God bless you . . . duck!

LANDLORD (exiting):
I'll have the law on you, wait and see.

PA: Good-by, good luck, and R. I. P.
(Door slams.)
(To Ma): That guy will get fat pulling stuff like that.

BILL: He can go to grass, we'll all stand pat.

MA: I'd like to spank him, the little brat. . . .

PA: I wish I knew if we'll have a flat!

BABY: Bad man . . . bad . . .

PA: That's right, my lad,
But a flat's a thing we need. . . .
If it ain't one curse
It's another that's worse. . . .
My gawd, what a life I lead!
(And that's that.)

(Will the Potters make good on their bluff or not? We'll all know next Sunday, perhaps.)

NEWS OF CHICAGO SOCIETY

There Is Always Time for Courtesy in Los Angeles

By Mme. X.

TO a Chicagoan, all too accustomed to the haughty austerity of the average local street car conductor, the genial, almost affectionate maners of the average Los Angeles street car conductor are a most moving, heart stirring experience. The first time we met it we thought there must be a screw loose in the pleasant individual who gave us change for our quarter and watched while we dropped our nickel in the fare box.

We gazed at the other passengers to see whether they shared our apprehension. But no one seemed surprised at such extraordinary affability. Instead, we noted that the relationship between passenger and conductor was apparently one of host and guests. Almost every one who got on the car asked some more or less simple question (for no one there seems to know where any particular car is going) and got a courteous and explicit reply. Often the conductor would add some bit of further elucidation.

The all pervading amiability that glowed in every street car on which we traveled was a continual source of amazed joy to the wandering Chicagoan. Finally, when in response to a vague query as to how to reach the shopping center of the city, conductor 1,782 (who was so benign as almost to be be-ten), laid his hand on the writer's shoulder and said, "I guess what you want is Robinson's; it's a fine store and I'll show you how to get there," comment on such courtesy was irrepressible.

His Courtesy Rewarded.

Whereupon 1,782, with great pride, took out of his pocket three slips of paper, on each of which was written in official diction the fact that he had been cited so many times for efficiency and courtesy. He explained that these citations came from passengers who voluntarily wrote to the company when especially satisfied with the attention of a conductor or a motorman; that according to the number of these citations the pay of a conductor was raised so much a month, and that this had proved so satisfactory to the public, the companies, and the employés that the companies did not mind the extra cost, which was not inconsiderable.

The Los Angeles cars are roomy, clean, airy, easy of access and exit, with seats both inside and out. The fare is 5 cents, with transfers everywhere. As they speed through those long, wide, well paved streets, through interminable residence districts composed of medium sized vine hung bungalows set in gardens that look like the vivid, impossible illustrations in a seed catalog, the visitor gets the impression, as of a city of thousands of simple, every day, extremely contented human being, easy, friendly, and not very elegant (to use an old-fashioned word).

Ten miles away the Pacific ocean throws its long, creamy billows on to the soft bosom of a twenty-five mile inward curving beach. As far as he can, man has defaced, degraded, and blighted this splendid stretch of sand and water. Hideous and frail buildings sprout from the former—cheap cafés, billiard halls, "shoot the shutes," and souvenir shops—while the sea gnaws and gnashes ugly piers and pilings as if to destroy its desecrators.

A Storehouse of Antiquity.

One of the most interesting of the "sights" in Los Angeles is the collection in Museum park of the skeletons of the first residents of that part of the country—mastodons, sabre-toothed tigers, sloths, megatheriums, et al.—which have been dug up from the nearby asphalt field, once the La Brea plantation.

For years, with the asphalt which was being taken out of this territory, great quantities of bones were also found and destroyed at much expense and trouble. A scientist came along and discovered that these bones were among the most valuable assets of the district and that one of the greatest storehouses of antiquity was being overlooked and annihilated. The La Brea collection, as it is now called, is one of the most noted of its kind in the world today and well worth a visit, though few of the thousands of Chicagoans who pass through Los Angeles every year know anything about it.

The visit of the Chicago Grand Opera company was the chief event on the California coast when this writer was in that part of the U. S. A. From all the surrounding country, from San Diego, Santa Barbara, Pasadena, and Coronado the populace streamed into Los Angeles to go to the opera.

The first names mentioned in the list of boxholders on the opening night were Mr. and Mrs. John J. Mitchell and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Schweppe, which goes to prove that wherever they go Chicagoans always get in the front row and may be counted on to do their duty by home institutions.

Up in San Francisco a daily paper started a contest by offering a prize for the best letter giving reasons why Mary Garden should make her home in California. There seemed too many out for that prize. Those who were with the company eight years ago, when, under the direction of the late Maestro Campanini the C. G. O. had such a bad time owing to a feud between the local theater and the public, must have enjoyed the difference in their reception which this time was a most enthusiastic one.

A View of San Francisco.

The fact that strikes the visitor to San Francisco most violently is the extraordinary short sightedness of the natives who in 1906 had an unexpected opportunity to undo an original and crass blunder in the building of their city.

With a site more beautiful than any other in the world; with adjacent scenery of unparalled loveliness; and with an unprecedented opportunity to scenery of unparalelled loveliness, and to follow art standards established by centuries of study and thought, the original builders of San Francisco yet ruined the looks, convenience, and comfort of their city by making their streets run straight up and down their steep hills instead of zigzagging them in leisurely, safe, and attractive fashion as do the streets of Naples, Rome, Genoa, Lisbon and all other famous hill cities.

The result is that when viewed from any of the nearby heights San Francisco has no beauty. Its gray bleak, featureless masonry rises without a saving splash of green to relieve it, and is without form or accent.

Think of those creamy ramparts of Naples, the garden walls, the verdure embowered houses, the graceful church steeples and domes, all encircled with their ribbons of gently sloping roads, or connected by those fascinating stairways which it is such fun to climb!

Is it either fun or pleasant to walk up or down some of those San Francisco thoroughfares? Is it soothing to climb or descend them in street cars or automobiles? It is not; it is a nightmare!

Palaces Near the Golden Gate.

Even nature seemed to realize the impossible manner in which the city was laid out, and did her best to clear the ground for a new and better designed metropolis by firmly, if not gently, shaking much of it down nearly fifteen years ago. If the town builders did not take advantage of their unexpected release from the bondage resulting from original mistakes it is to be hoped that should they be given a third opportunity, a more enlightened generation of citizens will be in charge of her destinies. At present the pedestrian there has to be a sticky footed human fly to get about with any degree of comfort.

But what palaces the San Franciscans build on their hilltops! Stunning white marble creations, charming stucco dwellings, stately brick mansions, friendly timbered Tudor homes attract the eye of the investigating tourist on every side. Of course there is the customary supply of tasteless architecture belonging to those decades when the art of building was going through the many infantile diseases to which American architecture seems to have been peculiarly susceptible.

However, even these striking examples of our growing knowledge and taste do not make the city of the Golden Gate beautiful as are her older rivals, or as by rights she should be, with the wealth of the Spreckels, Crockers, Floods, Newhalls, and other great and rich San Franciscan families being turned into stone, plaster, and brick.

An Imposing Pile of Marble.

There is no mansion in or near San Francisco, however, larger, more palatial, more imposing than the vast pile of marble with which Mrs. Francis Carolan, youngest daughter of the late George M. Pullman, has crowned the peak of a lonely and remote hill near Hillsborough, a neighboring suburb to Burlingame and San Mateo, two of the most fashionable residence districts in California. It is a stupendous piece of architecture, which looks as if built to house Louis XIV. in his most magnificent days.

It is set on wide and wind swept terraces, which are surrounded with stone balustrades and are now overgrown with weeds. From them the land slopes swiftly down in every direction as if abandoning the lonely, uninhabited palace and the four vast, unpeopled terraces to the winds and the clouds and the circling birds.

There is no visible attempt to carry out what must have been a part of the original design to lay out the formal gardens which the house and its setting requires. A long and charming two mile drive, through a virgin forest of live oaks, laurel, and other native trees and shrubs, leads from the main entrance to the massive entrance. The only sign of human habitation visible on the way up or after reaching the lofty plateau is a ramshackle, tumble down shanty on an abuting shoulder of the hill not far from the house itself.

Standing Desolate and Empty.

The whole place looks as if some magician had cast a spell over the owners before they had completed their work. You half expect to find the workmen asleep at their jobs, the gardeners snoring under the bushes, the servants dozing in their quarters, their employers dreaming in the marble halls, the guests slumbering in the ballroom, the musicians sunk in somnolent stupor over their fiddles and fifes.

The house, in spite of the unfinished aspect outside, is fully furnished and has been lived in by its owners. Much of Mrs. Carolan's wardrobe hangs in the closets, but now the vast pile stands desolate and empty. Mrs. Carolan spent the winter in New York, while her husband divided his time between that city and the country club at Burlingame.

As usual, the return to Chicago from the brilliant atmosphere of California, from its immaculate cities and radiant landscapes, seems like coming home to a slatternly, loud voiced, cheerful wife, whose hair hangs down her back, whose face is none too clean, whose embrace is hearty and comforting, if somewhat smelly.

We all of us native born love Chicago, and speak her praises when away, but we see her with especially clear vision after an absence, and thus seeing we can not help wondering why all these years of civic work have not mitigated two of her grossest blemishes, namely her filthy atmosphere and her vile transportation conditions.

Administration after administration has come into office in the city hall promising improvement, and yet today we are worse off than we were twenty-five years ago. The smoke canopy hangs blacker, and the street cars are more overcrowded than they were then. Is there no hope?

A Rival of Chesterton.

An interesting personality, a clever, alert, worldly wise Scotchman, Sir John Foster Fraser, is perching for a moment on our smoky doorsill. He is all kinds of a sport, being a writer of books, the correspondent for the London Standard, and a lot of other British newspapers, a traveler, a member of the Royal Geographic society, a student of international politics, a lecturer, and an all round good fellow. In his youth (not so long ago, entre nous) he made a tour of the world on a bicycle, and later told all about it in a book, "Round the World on a Wheel."

He is an expert on Russia and its tangled affairs, has traveled much in the land of the Muscovite, and written two works on his travels, "Red Russia and "Real Siberia." He even indulges in prophecy as to the future of that much mussed up country, foretelling a bloody rising against the present bolshevik dominion and an ultimate monarchial rule, when Russia will become the main economic factor in Europe.

Sir John is also a rival of our recent visitor, G. K. Chesterton, when it comes to making epigrams. Comparing national characteristics, he, Sir John, said that both Americans and English were conceited, but whereas the latter assumed their superiority we asserted ours. G. K. couldn't do much better, could he?

Once more are we Americans confronted by the fact, originally brought to our attention by J. M. Barrie, that wherever you find a particularly witty and lively Englishman you generally find that he is a Scot.

See the Season's Buds.

Tuesday evening will be a red letter one in the annals of the Junior leaguers, that energetic association of strictly young women, founded some years ago by Mrs. Howard Linn (at that time Miss Lucy Blair). Every season the Junior league gets up a performance of some sort, and these are always the gayest, smartest events of their kind in the social calendar.

On Tuesday the public will have a chance to see the buds of the season in a lively and original show called "Chairities" (and for heaven's sake, Mr. Compositor, don't strike out that first i). The various stunts are strung on to chairs of different makes and periods, chairs from the South Seas, Russia, England, Puritan chairs, and many others.

Miss Grace Henry, who is the executive secretary of the Junior leagues of the country—and these leagues extend the length and breadth of the land—is directing the training and performance of the more than eighty young women who are taking part in the show. Among those most actively in charge of the performance, heads of groups, etc., are Mrs. Owen Jones and the Misses Beatrix Thorne, Barbara Granger, Katherine Cooke, Martha Granger, Sarah Hinde, Virginia Graves, and Elizabeth Martin.

Mrs. William H. Mitchell II. is looking out for the advertising; Mrs. William E. Casselberry Jr. is ticket chairman; Miss Harriet McLaughlin is selling the boxes which, incidentally, are all sold. Miss Annette Washburne is managing the cast. Music and rehearsals are in charge of Miss Dorothy Marston (no easy job). Mrs. Edward L. Ryerson Jr. is, or was, looking after the supper and dance part of the entertainment. Owing to the fact that her husband was hurried to the hospital ten days ago for an appendix operation, she may have delegated this important part to some one else. The supper and dance are both included in the price of a ticket.

Helping Those Less Fortunate.

The Misses Elizabeth Baker and Judith Mabbatt are looking after the publicity, while the last named and Miss Harriet McLaughlin are marshaling the ushers. It is sure to be a most entertaining and lively evening, for the Junior leaguers have established a high standard in their entertainments, and each year sees them spurred on to further achievements.

The object of the association as stated in their leaflet is to interest the young women of Chicago in the industrial and social problems of the city and to help them study conditions and find their own work. Each member is supposed to interest herself in some definite occupation to help others less fortunate than herself.

Besides this, these yearly entertainments raise money which the league gives annually to such charities as the Juvenile Protective association, the Visiting Nurse association, the Society of Mental Hygiene, the Legal Aid society, the Infant Welfare society, the Park Ridge school for girls, Association house, Association of Practical Housekeeping centers, the Chicago Nursery and Half Orphan asylum, the Provident Day Nursery, and the rest room for working girls in the loop which is the leaguers' own especial enterprise. So you see they really need a great deal of money to aid these many, varied, and excellent enterprises.

Benefit Performance of "Bab."

Another promising entertainment offered by a philanthropic association is the benefit performance of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Bab," which the Kenwood Social Service club is giving tomorrow evening at the Blackstone theater for the exchequer of the Infant Welfare society. Mrs. Frank Winans and Mrs. Donald Murray are managing the affair, assisted by the Mesdames Charles Cobb, Eugene Schobinger, and the Misses Alice Lovell, Marion Bryant, Helen McNair, Pauline de Mesimy, Helen Leavitt, and Helen Grant.

While heartily approving of enterprises like these two, we hope that in time all our philanthropies will be organized under one management so that each may receive its just portion of moneys raised according to the value of the work done, and that efforts in the money raising line may not be duplicated or needlessly expended. Such a system is in fine working condition, I believe, in Cleveland.

Next Thursday will be a gala occasion at the Casino. There is to be a big club dinner, followed by a program from Miss Ruth Draper, the well known monologist. Mrs. Joseph G. Coleman wil preside at the dinner.

Woman's City Club Reviews Its Year's Work

THE eleventh annual meeting of the Woman's City club will be held tomorrow from 10:30 to 4 o'clock in the club rooms. Miss Edith Rockwood, the civic director, in referring to the club's work, says:

MISS EDITH ROCKWOOD

"The past year, with its 1,226 new members, making a net increase in the membership of 30 per cent, marks another year of successful endeavor. The increase in the revenue from dues and other sources amounting to $1,000 over previous year is another indication of the vitality of the club.

"It is only necessary to list some of the less tangible measures of the year's success to indicate the place which the Woman's City Club of Chicago plays in the life of the city and county. Our cooperation in the 'Every Woman at the Polls' campaign, the hundreds of names secured for the fifty ward law petition, the publication of the Illinois Voter's Handbook, the assistance given in the organization of citizenship classes, both in the club and its branches, and in other groups, the publication of the play, 'An Hour at the Polls,' the organization of the city-wide play festival, the successful candidates' meetings and study classes preceding the fall elections, the use made by outside organizations of our speakers bureau, the large number of visits made to institutions by our Cook county affairs committee and our public institution committee, the placing of a protective worker in Lincoln park by the Twenty-first and Twenty-third wards, the instigation of the opposition to the advertising street benches, the coöperation with the state building, housing, and zoning commission on the housing law, the request to Judge Torrison for a test case as to women's service on juries, the backing of the concerts by the Students' Symphony orchestra in the high schools, the textile exhibit, the strengthening of our branches in the wards—these and many more activities have been carried on during the last year under our various committees. For the first time our recommendation on a bond issue was not upheld at the polls, but the women's vote alone would have defeated the $2,000,000 deficit bond issue."

THE LIFE SAVER

By Guy Lee

I am bored to the marrow; most everything aids
The despair that the atmosphere round me pervades;
But a beacon of light in a planet engloomed
Is the news that the Prairie club's hikes are resumed.

For years and for years I have pondered the scheme
Of ending it all in a swift lethal dream;
But a miracle comes every week to lend hope:
I revive at the news of the Prairie club's lope.

O paragraph sweet! O announcement divine!
O item of joy to this sad heart of mine!
How oft have your three or four lines saved my neck—
Those wonderful lines of the Prairie club's trek!

Watch Pyorrhea Go

With War's Wonder Antiseptic

Gum soreness and bleeding usually end in one week. Destroys germ cause promptly. Free trial proves it.

Nothing like Kloria has ever been known before for sore, bleeding gums, pyorrhea, etc. Usually within one week all gum soreness and bleeding disappear and soon the shrunken gums tighten around the teeth again. Anyone can easily apply it, and the results are really amazing. Doubt it, if you must, but try it.

This is the same wonderful new antiseptic agent which healed war wounds often in one-fourth the usual time, and conquered germ infection where all old-standard antiseptics had failed.

Never before was there an antiseptic so healing, so effective in destroying germs, and with so many uses in every home.

Kloria doesn't irritate, is soothing, pleasant, and absolutely safe, because not poisonous. Yet by scientific test it is over forty times more germ-destroying than carbolic acid.

Apply it without fear to any skin disease, such as eczema or barber's itch, and notice how quickly the trouble fades away. Mark how it soothes soreness, irritation and itching. Note how promptly it destroys the pus infection of boils, carbuncles and sores; how it heals cuts and burns more rapidly than was ever known before. For dandruff, simply rub the scalp with Kloria and watch the scalp itching disappear in a few seconds, yet it is harmless as water to the hair. Try it for mouth wash and gargle—see how quickly it relieves sore throat, how clean the mouth feels. Harmless, yet far more effective than poisonous antiseptics for personal hygiene.

Dissolve a few Kloria Tablets in water and instantly you have, at a cost of a few cents, a large bottle of liquid antiseptic which is clean, colorless, tasteless and virtually odorless.

All druggists, 50c. Money refunded if not satisfied.

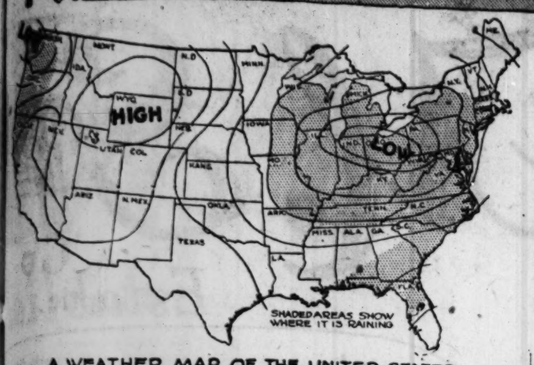
ASTRONOMY



A WEATHER MAP OF THE UNITED STATES

BY S. F. MAXWELL

THE SYSTEM OF WEATHER.

ASTRONOMERS study the weather as well as the stars. What happens on our earth has a close connection with what is happening on the sun, as one might suppose. The earth as well as the other planets has a system of weather of its own, but under the overlordship of the sun.

The succession of clear and stormy days is an interesting one to watch, particularly when it is understood what each change in the sky indicates. A clear day means that the air above is coming down.

Cool, dry air from four, five, or six miles up is descending to the ground in a great, wide, outgoing spiral, or anti-cyclone, as the scientists call it. Because the cool air is entering strata where the temperature is both higher and the pressure greater, its power to drink water is much increased, and so it absorbs all fogs and clouds, and eventually all small pools of standing water on the ground, turning them into a uniform invisible vapor. A barometric "high," as it is printed on the weather map, means clear, cool days, and sharp, sometimes frosty nights.

A high pressure area is a greedy water absorber. After the skies have been clear for a day or two the horizon begins to grow hazier and milkier. Stories and sunset become much redder, and if the nights are cold there may be a white, shaggy frost. All this means that such an increasing quantity of moisture is in the air that it is on the point of condensing. Sure enough, before many hours of this have passed clouds appear, usually followed by rain. Barring mountains and other local features which influence the weather, the normal procedure for a storm, or barometric "low," as it is called on the maps, is this:

The moist, heated air collects along the ground. One might suppose that wet air was heavier than dry air, because a wet cloth is heavier than a dry one, but exactly the reverse is true. Water vapor weighs only about half as much as air.

You have seen steam floating upward. If you could fill a balloon with steam it would fly. For this reason moist air weighs less on the barometer, and rises. As it goes up, in a great whirling cyclone, it enters strata where the temperature is less and the pressure lower, and clouds form and rain falls.

The atmosphere is not fastened tightly to the earth. Each particle of it attempts to go around like a little moon. There are so many of them crowded together in the air that they cannot do this, but they do impart a motion to it. The air, over the whole globe, has a slow, steady drift toward the east, quite apart from any local winds.

"High" and "low" areas are whirling spots drifting in the greater currents of the air. They are each usually some 1,500 miles in diameter. They follow each other around and around, quite evenly spaced. If it is clear a certain day, one may be reasonably sure that it will be cloudy six days after and clear again in twelve days. For the most part, the changes of weather follow one another with the regularity of a piece of machinery.

Weather is caused by the sun. Without its heat there could be no weather here, but only a still, icy world. It is quite apparent, then, that anything which affects the sun's radiating power must also affect the earth.

Just now the sun is sending out more heat than usual and has advanced the seasons all over the northern hemisphere. Eleven years ago the same thing was true. The years just passed have been quite cold. This was due to spots on the sun's surface. Spots are storms in the solar atmosphere. They run in cycles of eleven years, and by their size and frequency they determine whether we shall have warm or cool years.

ART AND ARCHITECTURE

House Beautiful Rates Its Grounds Important Asset

By Eleanor Jewett.

If you won't plant shrubbery and won't sow grass seed; if you laugh at vines and think flowers too much trouble—this is what you'll get. Do you think such homes add much to a city's beauty?

It is impossible to judge fairly a house stripped of its shrubbery and grounds. Figure to yourself the most attractive house you know, subtract from it every vestige of vine-leaf, and flower; put it in your mind's eye alone bleakly on a barren stretch of land—how much of its attractiveness has vanished? How much of its charm still remains to it? Probably, unless you have happened upon the mystical exception, the one house in a thousand, very little.

With this self-evident fact facing hundreds of home builders and home makers annually, it is surprising how little attention is paid to it. Particularly is this true in those localities where the beauty of the place depends largely upon the setting of trees and shrubs—the houses being of negligible value from an architectural standpoint.

To point the example, look, the next time you come from or go to the country, at the homes lying on the outskirts of the little towns through which you pass. More flagrant abuse of the possibilities in planting seems to be the order of the day on the edge of these suburban villages than in the hearts of them.

By the use of a judicious system of setting out bushes, shrubs, trailing vines, gardens, and trees, the ill kempt appearance of much of our countryside could be done away with. This need not necessarily be expensive. A great deal of beauty may be bought at little cost in money if one is willing to expend time and labor. Joint effort means a lessening of even this cost. Community effort is never more needed than in just such labor.

The same truths bear application to innumerable cases of houses rented or bought for the summer months. Go where you will, in Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, or further, and look at the average summer resort. A few, I grant you, are charming. Where they are you feel instinctively that they have been in the hands of the same families for successive years. Sometimes a generation has grown up in them. The grounds are cared for, the trees trimmed, the planting renewed, watched over, and improved. It is a labor of love bringing its own reward.

But the countless places that are not like that! Yet it is to those places our children are brought and turned loose to enjoy nature and learn appreciation of natural beauties. The irony of the situation is a bitter joke to those who realize how much environment has to do unconsciously with the shaping of the immature spirit. And with a little good will, knowledge, and work on the part of the adult, the child could be heir to the good things which should be his.

Another rather remarkable feature of the case is that, as a rule, the nearer we come to a city the more beautiful and luxurious is such planting as there is. I mean by this that, although a city by its very being denies the possibility of free growth to vegetation, yet where in a city there is found planting of trees, grass, shrubs, vines, and flowers, those plantings are cared for, treasured, appreciated, and increased.

Go through Chicago and look at the parks. Go to Evanston, Wilmette, Winnetka, and Hubbard Woods. You will find many trees, countless attractive patches of garden, houses covered with trailing vines and dense shrubberies. Go to a new section and note the bareness of it. The builder has gotten in his handiwork; the gardener is still to come.

Go out of Chicago to more distant suburbs. Go through Libertyville to Round Lake, Gray's Lake, Pistakee, and Fox Lake. Here you get more real country with a consequent diminishing in the amount of planting to be seen. The houses are not cheaper nor more vulgar particularly, but their owners do not appreciate the value of leaves and flowers in increasing the beauty value of their property. The country is too near them. Because the fields and meadows, woods and uplands flaunt the generosity of nature there seems no reason to treasure the crumbs from her bounteous table and feed the barren reaches along paved streets and by new painted (or weather tested) houses.

There seems no reason—when there is all the reason in the world for it.

Similarly with the resorts near these lakes. They possess some beautiful places, houses of charming exterior, set on high land, surrounded with grounds divided between open green lawn and shadow crowded shrubbery, punctuated by glorious old trees. Unfortunately such homes are the exception.

More numerous are the tiny cottages built too near the water, unbeautified by additional plantings, uncared for (presumably, as far as the stranger eye can see), and unmistakably cheap. Their stamp stamps those who live in them. The vulgarity of their ill kempt condition must strike through to the persons of their owners. A person with beauty of soul or intelligence of mind could not be contented in such houses, even though they are nothing more than resorts, places of refuge against the summer heat and dirt of the city.

Now for the other side of the picture and to paint it more clearly, it may be as well to come down to the specific instance of one house, owned by one man, in one locality. Limiting it thus, it may yet be extended to cover many houses, owned by many men, in many and various localities. The point to be driven home is that what one man can do with one house in one spot may be done just as easily by others working under similar conditions and similar drawbacks.

The case in point is found in the admirable little book, "Planning the Home Grounds," one of a series of ten booklets comprising the "Landscape Garden Series," edited by Ralph Rodney Root, B. S. A., M. L. A., and got out in attractive form by the Garden press, Davenport, Ia.

Mr. Root was for five years the head of the professional course in landscape gardening at the University of Illinois, and was head of the Summer School of Landscape Architecture in Lake Forest. The series will probably be quoted from again, but the point at issue just now finds voice in this:

"In planting your own place and watching the plants grow year by year, there will develop on your own grounds features of attractiveness and charm which will become as endeared to you as the rooms within the home. An old bush or tree which is set out and tenderly cared for often becomes in after-years a reminder of a thousand pleasant memories. Regardless of how much is attempted, there are two ways of regulating our action. One way, as with all other things, is to follow the 'hit and miss' path, taking the course of least resistance, building up the grounds in a haphazard manner without particular thought or purpose. The other way is to plan what is best to be done, using the proper foresight as to the outcome.

"Certainly, there are many charming old places that just seem to have happened. Not only do we enjoy and admire them to the utmost, but we marvel at what are really chance results. But these cases are the exception.

"Experience has proven that the reasonable course is the wiser, safer, surer, and least expensive. The different parts of the ground all serve different purposes, and with them, as with anything else, the first requirement of beauty is that they satisfy that requirement of use, but in an artistic way.

"The question may come up as to what extent should the home owner be his own designer. He should be observant enough to have ideas, to know that which he would like to have, in order that he himself, where attempting to carry out these ideas—assuming they are good ones, will realize that success depends upon the amount of expenditure and the amount of skill and specialized knowledge required to successfully carry them out. Landscape architects are especially trained men for this very purpose, and when it is possible and practical they, of course, should be consulted.

"Many places, however, are not large enough to warrant the employment of a professional man, and often when the home owner of very large places derives much pleasure in planning and carrying out his own ideas there is need only for the information which will best help him. It is necessary to have a complete plan and stick to it regardless of who makes the plan or whether the work is done all at once or year by year.

"For those who want to divide their expenditure over a period of several years there are equal possibilities. I have in mind a small place where the owner carefully planned his grounds in advance of any undertaking. The first year he planted all the trees, the foundation planting in front, and the shrub plantations to screen out objectionable parts. The second season the foundation planting was made complete and the planting at the corners added. The third season finished the shrub planting, and the evergreens were put in their proper place. In the fourth season the herbaceous perennials and the architectural features completed the carrying out of the plans.

"This place never looked as though it had been treated stingily, and each successive stage marked just that much more improvement. Of course different preferences may demand a different order in the successive stages, but the function and importance of the plan is apparent throughout.

"The first step in making a plan for the place is to locate upon paper the outlines of the property, house, and all other existing features which would have an influence in the general design."

I used the whole argument for emphasis, but of course the single owner is dwelt upon in the closing paragraphs. What that man did, little by little, and year by year, is not impossible of accomplishment by others. His way, the slow way, is, too, a surer way to make certain that your planting when finished will be that which you had wanted it to be when first you visioned it as a thing that might some day come true, and then started to lay the foundation of your dreams with the help of a pencil and a sheet of paper.

NEWS OF THE RELIGIOUS WORLD

Luther Before the Diet of Worms 400 Years Ago Today

By Rev. Gardner MacWhorter.

REV. WILLIAM C. DE WITT
GIBSON STUDIO TRAVELER PHOTO.

FOUR HUNDRED years ago today Martin Luther followed the imperial herald from the hotel of the Knights of St. John past eager crowds which lined the streets of the city of Worms into the presence of the Emperor Charles V. and his council. On the day following he appeared for the second time, and then took the firm stand which has become historic: "Here I stand; I can do no other. So help me God. Amen."

President Harding has issued the following statement, through the Rev. Roward R. Gold, national director of the Lutheran celebration:

"On the occasion of the 400th celebration of Luther's stand before the Diet of Worms. I think there will be general agreement that Luther's firm advocacy of unfettered opinion deserves commemoration as one of the notable contributions toward mankind's intellectual emancipation. Its fitting celebration will be a testimony to the fact that the world has, since his time, traveled far on the way to realizing his ideal of full individual liberty.

"Very truly yours,

"WARREN G. HARDING."

Special services in commemoration of Luther's bold confession before the imperial council at Worms on April 17 and 18, 1521, will be held today in the 215 Lutheran churches in Chicago and vicinity, and the Missouri Synod Lutheran church is arranging for a massmeeting at the Concordia Teachers' college at River Forest, Ill., in honor of this event and of the diamond jubilee of the college's founding on Sunday afternoon, June 5.

The fourteenth annual Hale memorial sermon of the Western Theological seminary will be delivered by the Rev. Jesse Herbert Dennis, D. D., on the subject, "The Work of the Church Among the Mormons," at St. Barnabas' church, 4237 West Washington boulevard, next Sunday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock. The late Bishop Hale bequeathed to the seminary as trustee securities and property, in addition to his library, valued at upwards of $50,000, the income to be used exclusively in providing for the delivery, publication and distribution of an annual sermon, and a series of lectures on topics within the range fixed in the terms of the bequest of some phase of the work of the Episcopal church.

The thirty-sixth annual reunion of the Roman Catholic clergy who are graduates of the American college in Rome, Italy, will be held on May 11 and 12 at the Congress hotel. It is expected that a majority of the 600 priests, bishops, and archbishops who are of the alumni in the United States will attend. Several of the alumni occupy prominent positions in the American hierarchy, notably Cardinal O'Connell of Boston and Cardinal Dpugherty of Philadelphia. The late Cardinal Farley of New York was an enthusiastic alumnus of the college. Four archbishops grace the membership list, Moeller of Cincinnati, Hanna of San Francisco, Shaw of New Orleans and Glennon of St. Louis, while fifteen bishops are counted among the American alumni. The rector of the American college in Rome is the Rt. Rev. Charles O'Hern, formerly a Chicagoan, educated in St. Gabriel's parish school.

A lecture on Christian Science will be delivered by Bliss Knapp, C. S. B., of Brookline, Mass., member of the board of lectureship of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock in Third Church of Christ, Scientist, Washington boulevard and Leavitt street.

The Sunday Evening club of the First Congregational church in Maywood, the Rev. Jesse J. Kolmos, pastor, will be addressed this evening by Dean Shailer Mathews of the divinity school of the University of Chicago. On next Sunday evening Judge Harry Olson, chief justice of the Municipal court, will be the last speaker of the season. On Wednesday evening, April 27, the men of the Maywood Sunday Evening club will meet at a dinner to plan for next year's program and activities.

The Rev. William Converse De Witt, S. T. D., dean of the Western Theological seminary, 2720 West Washington boulevard, and professor of pastoral theology and homiletics, will complete his sixteenth year in that position at the seminary's thirty-sixth commencement next month. The Western seminary has furnished priests to the bishops of the Episcopal church in half the states in the union and in the Philippine islands, Japan, Australia, and Sweden, according to the latest catalogue.

The Rev. Dean De Witt is a graduate of Racine college and the General Theological seminary, ordained deacon and priest by the late Bishop McLaren, and the former rector of Grace church, Freeport, Ill., for two years and of St. Andrew's church, Chicago, for seventeen years, from which he was called to the deanship of the Western Theological seminary in 1905.

As a clerical deputy to the general convention in 1901, 1910, and 1916 he has taken an active part in the national affairs of the Episcopal church as well as on diocesan boards, and he is the author of "A Manual of Instruction for Confirmation" and "Decently and in Order," a treatise on pastoral theology published in 1915.

Six important mission fields form the topics for the Institute on World Christianity being held in the Harper memorial library under the auspices of the divinity school of the University of Chicago on the Monday evenings in April and the first two Mondays in May. India and Japan have been discussed in their international aspects on the last two Mondays, and tomorrow China and the social aspect of Christian missions in the republic will be the subject of Prof. Ernest D. Burton and Prof. Ellsworth Faris, with a stereopticon lecture by Dr. W. R. Taylor. The three other mission fields to be treated in this course are, in order, Africa, the near east, and Latin-America.

The Chicago Church federation announces a rally of Christian workers to consider opportunities and plans for open air evangelism during the summer season, to be held tomorrow evening in the association auditorium, 19 South La Salle street, at 6:15 o'clock. All those who are interested in opportunities for open air work are invited, pastors, religious leaders, and the laity. Dr. Charles L. Goodell, executive secretary commission on evangelism of the federal council of Churches of Christ in America, will speak on the subject, "Why and How to Preach the Gospel to Nonchurch Goers." Dr. Ernest A. Bell is the chairman of the committee on open air evangelism of the Chicago Church federation.

Fifth Church of Christ, Scientist, of Chicago announces a lecture on Christian Science by William D. Kilpatrick, C. S. B., of Detroit, Mich., member of the board of lectureship of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., on Tuesday evening in the church edifice, 4840 Dorchester avenue, at 8 o'clock.

IF WE COULDN'T TELL A LIE

INGROWN TOE NAIL Will Turn Right Out Itself

A few drops of "Outgro" upon the skin surrounding the ingrown toe nail reduces inflammation and pain at once and so toughens the tender, sensitive skin underneath the toe nail that it cannot penetrate the flesh, and the nail turns naturally outward almost over night.

"Outgro" is a harmless antiseptic manufactured for chiropodists. However, any druggist will sell you a small bottle containing directions.

The North Shore Hotel —of Evanston, Ill.

"THE sweet rose dawn of life" very aptly and very poetically illustrates the every-day existence of those wise and fortunate persons who permanently abide in the beautiful North Shore Hotel of Evanston—Chicago's suburb de luxe.

The patient "mater" whose domestic responsibilities weigh heavily; the growing "tots" who look to you for guidance and a healthful mode of living; even you yourself, all the family will enjoy life as it is lived in the North Shore Hotel of Evanston.

If shopping is to be done, or a theatre party is planned, you're but 20 minutes from the Loop, where the great stores and temples of amusement are centered. Place the city and the country in the crucible of common sense—extract the best of each.

GRAND PIANOS

Used Grands

Our salesrooms are unique in the opportunities they offer to students in search of low priced grands. Viewed from the standpoint of beauty and utility, the instruments are exceptional values. Many are greatly underpriced. They are fully guaranteed by us to be for practical purposes as good as when new.

Our system of modernizing fits them to give entire musical satisfaction. All pianos bear tags with plainly marked figures.

Small Grands, $745

The widespread demand for a small grand piano is adequately met in this charming instrument. The most critical endorse it as a piano which exemplifies real craftsmanship.

We have carried this make for years and know that it gives notable service. Small in size, with graceful proportions and fetching case design, its tone appreciates with age in depth and beauty. Our showing contains the latest models in various woods.

Lyon & Healy Apartment Grands

Of our own manufacture and designing, these instruments measure up to the most rigid specifications. They are the result of over fifty years of serving retail piano buyers. By observation and experience we have evolved a piano which embodies musical qualities of the highest degree with extraordinary durability. It is an instrument in keeping with the modern home, the space limitations of which have been carefully studied to develop a small but properly voiced grand piano.

Steinway Grands

Consciously or otherwise, choice is in a great measure influenced by faith. Ordinarily home builders buy a piano but once. The investment is a permanent one and it is logical that not only the perceptible qualities of a piano but the reputation back of it should be guiding factors.

Thus it is that the Steinway piano has enjoyed such wonderful success. For generations the same staunch aspirations have governed its manufacture until now universal recognition is given to it by the artist and the music lover.

CADILLAC'S 8 BARGAINS

CADILLAC 8, TYPE 59, VICTORIA COUPE. This is the latest and current series that we are selling new today for over $5,000. It is a roomy 4 passenger coupe, very popular enclosed car that we have ever produced. Customer is exchanging for one of our cars of larger seating capacity. Is painted a dark Cadillac green. Upholstered in beautiful velour that shows practically no wear. Has an excellent set of Royal cord tires, one extra, seat covers, bumper, etc. Mechanical condition we will guarantee. We have never had an opportunity before of offering a car of this description and condition at this price and immediate action will be necessary if you want to avail yourself of this bargain. Price $2,200.

HAYNES. This is model 37, conceded by most people to be the most popular model this company has ever produced. This car is equipped with excellent set of tires and one extra. Mechanical condition is exceptionally good and mileage is low. This car was used by the original owner and driven by him on week end trips only. There is also a demountable winter top made of wood and isinglass which is in excellent condition. In addition to the best bargain offered today in a Haynes car. Special for this sale, $875.

HUDSON SUPER-SIX TOURING CAR, model H. One of the original owner has taken good care of this automobile, not only as its paint and upholstering condition, but given it excellent attention as far as lubrication is concerned. Owner is entering him self; for this reason this car does not look or demonstrate like an ordinary car. Painted dark blue which is in exceptionally fine condition; it has just had a new top put on it. Has a practically new set of Goodyear cord tires, extra tube, bumper, spare wheel, and clock. We consider ourselves very fortunate at being able to offer this car at this price. It will be sold to the first person who wants a car that has not been abused and that he can save money on. Our price on this car is $1,000.

MOLINE-KNIGHT, 4 CYLINDER CHUMMY. This is the 1918 series and a car that has had very little mileage and wonderful care. In fact, it does not show but very little wear. Equipped with a practically new set of tires and extras. Paint, upholstering, and mechanical condition all that you would expect in a high class car. This car is equipped with the Knight 4 cylinder motor, which is noted for its endurance and economy. We believe this to be the best bargain we have had to offer in this make of car. Special for this sale, $800.

JORDAN SEDAN. This is Model F, 1920. Has been delivered just a few months. It is painted a dark blue and upholstered in dark blue velour that shows practically no wear. Has an excellent set of cord tires and one extra, bumper, front and rear, clock, etc. This is practically the same car as they are delivering new today and sell for over $4,000. We can honestly be classed as the ordinary used automobile. Will bear most rigid examination and demonstration. Can be had at about a 50 per cent reduction. Special for this sale, $2,100.

PEERLESS TOURING CAR, 1920. This is the same car they are delivering new today for over $3,300. It has been carefully used by the original purchaser, who has given it excellent attention, and it has just been driven enough to smooth it up and make it run beautifully. Has an excellent set of Goodyear cord tires and 2 extra as well as a full set of wind shields. Upholstery and top are in very fine condition. The price that we are offering this car at makes it necessary for us to make immediate action if interested. This car will bear most rigid examination and demonstration, and is in fact classed as the finest we offer it at. Price $1,800.

PIERCE ARROW, MODEL 6-48, TOURING CAR. This car has been privately owned and carefully used. Is equipped with an excellent set of cord tires. Mechanical condition is good. Paint is in good shape. Also has with it a demountable top which covers this car into a sedan or limousine. We believe this is the best bargain that has been offered. Special for this sale, $500.

REAL ESTATE NEWS

REALTY BOARD HEAD REPLIES TO ACCUSATIONS

Answers Charges Made by Tenants' Official.

THE directors of the Chicago Real Estate board at a recent meeting authorized President L. M. Smith officially to reply to the series of charges against that organization made during the last few weeks in various newspapers by the Chicago Tenants' Protective league. Below is Mr. Smith's statement.

BY L. M. SMITH.

[President of the Chicago Real Estate Board.]

The secretary of the Chicago Tenants' Protective league purposely or through ignorance persists in misrepresenting and distorting facts in his references to the Chicago Real Estate board. His absurdities nullify effects with those who know, but for the benefit of those who might think that "silence gives consent" the directors of the Chicago Real Estate board authorize this statement.

The press report of his testimony before the Dailey joint legislative committee and elsewhere quotes him as reading from letters and newspaper clippings for the purpose of showing that the real estate board was a trust, had caused a building strike, was collecting large sums of money from owners, and that I introduced a resolution in May, 1918, "urging the United States government to place a ban on building construction in Chicago as a war measure"; this he charged, "was inspired by a desire to create a housing shortage and a consequent increase of rents."

Owners Not Active Members.

The Chicago Real Estate board is an association of agents; owners cannot become active members. It does not own property, build or buy material, and never did. It does not belong to a union or hire labor, and never did; therefore it cannot be a trust, and, without labor affiliations, could not cause a strike. It cannot take profit.

Beyond living within civil and moral law it has no jurisdiction over the private lives and affairs of its members, numbering about 5,000, all upright citizens, living within the codes. If all were owners they would comprise but one-twelfth of the 60,000 in Chicago, yet this tenants' official clothes the board with plenary power and frantically tries to hold it responsible for the acts of 55,000 non-board Chicago owners.

We raise money from owners every legislative year to pay expense of a legislative committee, attorneys, witnesses, and experts to defend and protect the rights of property. Why should we not? We represent the greatest fundamental necessity for human existence, industrial growth, and municipal expansion. Without buildings erected for rental, commercial centralization would be impossible. Our business depends on buildings of all kinds. Why should we stop construction?

Aid Is Blocked.

Our tenant friend may or may not know that the Chicago Real Estate board held a convention last year of factory built house manufacturers from Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana, and Illinois. Arrangements were well under way to build in great numbers and relieve housing shortage, but were prevented by a branch or branches of union labor, who refused permission to assemble the houses in Chicago.

He may or may not know that in the early part of the war authorities in Washington asked for and received the number of vacancies in Chicago which our rent agents faithfully compiled, showing 25 per cent in some localities, with an average of about 18 per cent.

Upon that information, actuated by the patriotism of the day, with no other thought, connection, or purpose than loyal devotion, I introduced the following resolution on May 4, 1918. It proves itself.

"Whereas, The daily press and various other publications have given wide circulation to our government's request for individual cooperation in conserving building materials and labor, that war necessities and contracts may not be hampered by the drain of deferable private enterprises; and,

"Whereas, It is reported that several professional or speculative building contractors are about to start constructing apartment houses in Chicago, contrary to the spirit and sentiment of the hour and in apparent disregard of the government's urgent appeal for personal assistance; and,

"Whereas, Members of the Chicago Renting Agents' association, representing all parts of the city, have made a careful counting of vacancies and find that 15 per cent of houses and flats are unrented, the vacant list including all classes and prices; and,

"Whereas, In addition to the present large number of vacancies we have the increasing soldier list of lease cancellations, to be followed by many more of the same kind as rent contributors and direct lessees are called to the colors, furnishing vacancies each renting season equivalent to a large number of new buildings and sufficient for all demands; and,

"Whereas, The figures and facts furnished by the Chicago Renting Agents' association are reliable beyond question and show conclusively that new dwelling buildings in Chicago are not only unnecessary but would be superfluous; now, therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the Chicago Renting Agents' association, consider it our patriotic duty to advise our government of dwelling conditions as they exist in Chicago, in the belief that such information will be of assistance in directing labor and materials where most needed."

Building Stopped by War Board.

Still this man states it was inspired "to increase rent" three years later under a post-war condition that no mortal mind could then predict.

This prophetic gentleman may or may not know that the war industry board and not the resolution stopped building. It is, however, true that the resolution was sent to Washington and our government assigned Mr. La Farge of the United States Housing corporation, who checked our vacancies, and upon his report the first war contracts were awarded to Chicago.

He may or may not know that our rent agents were pledged to house 5,000 war workers and located them all in vacancies on the south side.

He may or may not have purposely overlooked another war resolution that I introduced and which was adopted by the Chicago real estate board, as follows:

"Whereas, Our government is at war with foreign nations and men must respond to their country's call; and

"Whereas, Many volunteers are direct or contributory payers of home rent; and

"Whereas, Enforced nonsupport from war absentees will necessitate reduction of rent or cancellation of leases in numerous cases; and

"Whereas, It is the incumbent duty of all men and organizations in authority to create sentiment responsive to war requirements; and

"Whereas, It is expected and proper that the Chicago real estate board should anticipate and recommend patriotic treatment of all war leases;

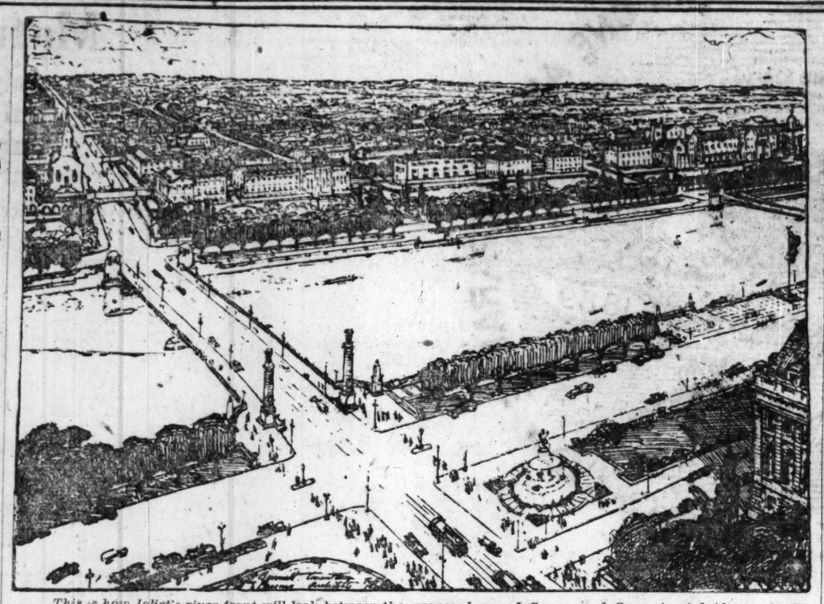
"Now, Therefore, Be It Resolved: That this board appeal to owners to reduce the rent, where necessary, of all tenants engaged in the defense of this country, and

"Be It Further Resolved: That such reduction is not to be prejudicial or operate as a reason for reducing the rent of similar houses or flats occupied by other than war tenants."

Advocated More Building.

Notwithstanding the above, this man attempts to convince all Chicago that the real estate board is the supreme source of rent profiteering, strikes trusts, dirty money, and criminally impure in motive and practice. All this and more, if reports are true, he impugns in the face of printed public records to the contrary and showing that the board has for a year advocated more buildings, which the tenants' association as persistently discourage by their ill advised manipulation of conditions self-alleviatory in the natural, economic process of readjustment, already under way. It is trying to save tenants from their own recklessness by defeating the Kessinger bills, honestly believing that if they become a law it will only multiply their troubles.

The board has offered at Springfield testimony of the highest authorities with accurate figures and statistics, and it stands without brass bands, special trains, banners, and frenzy, absolutely and squarely on the issue that the bills are unpractical, dangerous to public policy, and against real estate and tenants' mutual interests. The board will abide by the calm, honest, and deliberate judgment of the good, intelligent men at the capital.



This is how Joliet's river front will look between the proposed new Jefferson and Cass street bridges. A new civic center will be built on the east bank, with a new city hall, auditorium, police and fire stations, and possibly a museum and armory. One corner of one of the proposed buildings can be seen on the right hand side of the above photograph.

"The widening of the river channel and the development of a parkway along Bluff street with terraced gardens on the bluff, as will be possible with the projected Des Plaines river improvement, also the construction of well designed bridges—all these changes present an unusual opportunity for impressive grouping of buildings," reads the report on a Joliet city plan just published. The report is by Edward H. Bennett and William E. Parsons of Chicago, consulting architects.

JOHN C. CHRISTENSEN NOW ARCHITECT FOR BOARD OF EDUCATION

John C. Christensen, who for eleven years has been assistant architect of the board of education and also superintendent of construction of Chicago schools, has been appointed to succeed Arthur F. Hussander as architect of the school board. Mr. Hussander has retired from public service to resume the practice of architecture, with offices at 650 South Clark street.

[Gibson Photo.]

Mr. Christensen, who lives at 3255 Evergreen avenue, was deputy commissioner of buildings under Mayor Busse. He is both a licensed architect and engineer. His appointment to succeed Mr. Hussander was announced by President Edwin S. Davis of the school board a few days ago.

BIG NORTH SIDE FLAT PROJECT WAITS ON LABOR

If labor costs are cut to $1 an hour, work will hum on the $350,000 four story apartment building at the southwest corner of Loyola and Lakewood avenues, according to Architects Louis C. Bouchard & Co. Actual work has started, but construction will go ahead only on a small scale until the labor situation clears.

The building will front 151 feet on Loyola and 150 on Lakewood. It will have seventy apartments of two, three, and four rooms; also twelve stores and several offices. O. C. Joung is owner. A completion date of Aug. 1 is hoped for.

$175,000 Chatham Movie for Cottage Grove Ave.

Construction has started on the new $175,000 Chatham theater at 7544 Cottage Grove avenue by the National Theaters company from plans by Architects Fugard & Knapp. J. J. Cooney, formerly with the Vernon theater, Sixty-first street and Vernon avenue, will be manager. It will have 1,500 seats and is designed in the Spanish renaissance.

OAK PARKERS WIN BATTLE IN WAR ON BIG FLAT BUILDINGS

Oak Park residents have won their first battle in the war on big flat buildings. As a result of the strenuous protest by property owners against the proposed fifty-two apartment house at the northeast corner of Euclid avenue and Pleasant street, and another big structure at the southwest corner of Randolph and Oak Park avenue, the village trustees referred the matter to the village attorney and a special matters committee, who in turn put it up to the zoning committee.

This body, of which Commissioner of Public Works Charles E. White Jr. is chairman, at once adopted resolutions which temporarily places the two blocks bounded by South boulevard, Oak Park avenue, Randolph street and Euclid avenue, in a residential zone and restricts building operations of certain sorts until there is a public hearing on the proposed zoning ordinance on May 18.

The North Oak Park Improvement association and the Irving Improvement association, in the south part of the village, recently passed resolutions asking that the trustees refrain from granting flat building permits until action could be taken on a permanent zoning ordinance.

GLEN ELLYN TO HAVE 254 ACRE ADDITION ON ROOSEVELT ROAD

Another good sized bit of Du Page county farm land is to be cut up into lots for suburban homes as the result of the sale of the George M. Nicoll 254 acre farm at the northeast corner of Roosevelt and Joliet roads, part of which is in Glen Ellyn, to the United Building and Development organization, a Cleveland and St. Louis concern.

The farm fronts one mile on Roosevelt and three-quarters of a mile on Joliet road, also known as Park boulevard. Half of it has been platted and 50x125 lots will be sold at from $300 to $2,100. The eastern half probably will be laid out with curving roads instead of the old fashioned checkerboard plan used on the western half, and acre lots may be sold.

According to Louis Block, who, with A. P. Sargol, will manage the property, houses will be erected for lot buyers who want to build this summer. The tract will be called the Roosevelt Garden Home Sites. There will be a twenty-five foot building line and other restrictions. George G. Newberry & Co. represented both parties in the purchase of the farm.

YOU CAN BUILD IN ELMHURST IF YOU HAVE ONLY $100

Man with Small Funds but Strong Arms Welcome.

THIS is the sixth of a series of articles on what the suburbs have to offer the Chicagoan tired of paying rent and who is wondering where to buy a building site for a house or a home already built. Glen Ellyn, River Forest, Riverside, Wilmette, and Park Ridge have had their advantages told on previous Sundays. Another suburb will be given next week.

BY AL CHASE.

[Real Estate Editor of The Tribune.]

Elmhurst, Du Page county's metropolis, edged itself into this series of home jaunts ahead of several other towns under consideration by the sheer news value of what it has to offer the Chicago flat renter. We've heard about a lot of attractive home propositions, but they usually fail to connect with the average home hunter because the initial payment is beyond his bank balance.

But if you've got only $100 in cash and two strong arms, together with the inclination and ability to use them to build your own house, you can have a home of your own in Elmhurst long before dog days.

Not a New Scheme.

It's not a new scheme. Frank W. Moureau of 118 North La Salle street has been successful with this method in western suburbs for ten years. He recently inaugurated it, however, in his home town, Elmhurst, and now has on his sixty-five acre subdivision six houses under construction by the men who bought the lots, and several more are to start shortly.

"Their labor is my security," explained Mr. Moureau. "I loan the buyer of a lot enough to build his house, charging him 6 per cent and a 3½ per cent commission. I figure on my profits only from my lot. He can buy his lumber and material wherever he wants to. I O K the bills and after the house is completed I take a five year mortgage on it which he can pay in semi-annual payments.

Average Material Loan $2,000.

"A man can build a five room bungalow for $2,800 when he has no labor to pay for, which would cost him $4,000 to have built and which I would have to sell at $5,800 if I were building it to dispose of at a profit. I am selling my lots at from $600 to $800. My average loan for materials is $2,000."

Here are some of the builders: Amos Hargraves of Glen Ellyn paid $675 for a lot, borrowed $2,500 from Mr. Moureau for building materials, and now has a six room house under roof. He works Saturday afternoons and Sundays.

Lou C. Wells, a Chicago carpenter, has just started work on a house. Herman Krueger, a stone mason, is building a six room house. William C. Dahl, a painter, is putting up a four room bungalow. Ralph H. Nichols, an employé of the C. & N. W. R. R., is just starting a small house. Thomas A. Wells also is just beginning on his own home. It will be 24x44 with a sun parlor and will cost him $3,500. In the open market he probably would have to pay around $8,500 for its equal. His lot cost him $800.

Other Building Activities.

This "build your own home" subdivision is a few blocks north of the Northwestern station and is bounded by York street, Third street, Melrose avenue, North avenue, Emory avenue, and Lake street.

There is considerable other building in Elmhurst. E. A. Cummings & Co. have taken over the Fisher farm, east of the station, and are subdividing it. They contemplate building several houses.

Another concern is planning fifteen houses to cost around $15,000 each. George Chapman is building four residences which have all been sold. There are other building operations going on in various parts of the town.

A Fact or Two.

Here are a few facts about Elmhurst: It is fifteen miles from Chicago. Its population jumped from 2,380 in 1910 to 4,594 in 1920, a 95 per cent increase. It has four train services to Chicago, the Northwestern, the third rail interurban, Illinois Central, and Chicago Great Western. It has a Lutheran college. Also a new $350,000 York Township High school, which boasts a swimming pool with free instruction for men, women, and kids. There are three public schools and two parochial. A $25,000 Masonic temple, with both Blue lodge and chapter, was finished last spring.

There also is a town community building, with billiard rooms, dance hall, and bowling alley. Elmhurst has a public library. And it also has a movie house that's open Sundays.

Joliet Gets Busy on Zoning While Chicago Still Waits

One by one Chicago's suburbs are going ahead and zoning themselves carefully and thoroughly, with a view to municipal comfort and contentment in their old age, while Chicago itself, after a year and a half of patient waiting for Mayor Thompson to name a zoning commission, still is waiting. Anyway, Joliet, believes more in doing than horn tooting, and so our enterprising steel suburb to the southwest has adopted a city plan which calls for a complete zoning of the city.

A report on a city plan, prepared for the city planning commission of the Joliet Association of Commerce by Edward H. Bennett and William E. Parsons, consulting architects of Chicago, assisted by H. T. Frost, has just been published.

Things to Be Done.

Here, briefly, are the nine things the city plan does for Joliet, as outlined in the report:

It marks off the city into zones for manufacturing, business, and residence, so as to insure homes against invasion of objectionable industries.

It points out defects in the present street system and shows how a few extensions and improvements may perfect this.

By classifying streets into major and minor it enables the city to make great economies in determining the kind and width of paving.

It incorporates the Lakes to Gulf waterway project so that it will be a benefit, not a detriment; to Joliet.

It provides better street car routes, to be extended as the city grows.

It points out the interference of railroads with the city streets and shows how this may be avoided.

It provides a useful and beautiful arrangement for proposed and future civic buildings.

It extends the park and recreation grounds in line with present needs and future growth.

Seeks Permanent Prosperity.

It does all these things on the ground that in the next generation many millions of public and private money will be spent in Joliet and maintains that if this should be according to a comprehensive, flexible, and unified plan, it will result in the permanent prosperity, health and welfare of its citizens.

Joliet's city plan is looking ahead to a city of two and a half times its present population, or to the time when it has 150,000 people. This, it is estimated, will be in about thirty years.
